Judge Walton Pratt has shown that she is deserving of the public trust. She has demonstrated the highest ethical standards and a firm commitment to applying our country's laws fairly and faithfully. She understands that the appropriate role for a judge is to interpret our laws, not to write them.

Tanya Walton Pratt is also a recognized leader in our community. She has also been honored with numerous awards including the Career Achievement Award from the Archdiocese of Indianapolis and the Key to the City of Muncie.

I can say with confidence that Tanya Walton Pratt is the embodiment of good judicial temperament, intellect, and evenhandedness. If confirmed, she will be a superb and historic addition to the Federal bench. I am pleased to give her my highest recommendation.

I urge my colleagues to join me—and Senator LUGAR—in supporting this extremely well-qualified and deserving nominee.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, Brian Jackson and Elizabeth Erny Foote are outstanding candidates for judgeships in Louisiana's Middle and Western Districts. I was honored to recommend Brian Jackson and Beth Foote to the President last year.

These two well-qualified, non-controversial nominees are sorely needed in the districts they have been nominated to serve, where courts are facing unacceptable backlogs and sitting judges are overwhelmed with unmanageable caseloads. Ms. Foote and Mr. Jackson have been eager for this body to let them get to work serving justice to the people of Louisiana since they were reported by the Judiciary Committee on March 18. I am relieved to see that their long journey toward confirmation is drawing to a close.

Brian Jackson is an exemplary public servant with a distinguished record as an attorney and prosecutor. He has extensive Federal experience, having worked for the Department of Justice for 16 years. From 1992 to 2002, he served as first assistant U.S. attorney and U.S. Attorney for the Middle District of Louisiana. As the first assistant U.S. attorney, he managed or litigated a variety of civil and criminal cases. Because of his leadership, he was selected in 2001 to be the interim U.S. attorney for the Middle District pending the confirmation of President Bush's nominee.

Prior to becoming an assistant U.S. attorney, he served as an associate deputy attorney general in Washington, DC. In this role, he was as a principal adviser to the Attorney General and Deputy Attorney General on civil rights and criminal justice policies. In 1992 he was honored as the recipient of the Attorney General's Award for Equal Employment Opportunity for his leadership in this area.

Since 2002, he has distinguished himself in private practice in the firm Liskow and Lewis, where he is a shareholder. He is currently chair of the firm's government investigations and white collar crime groups and he is on Liskow and Lewis' board of directors and is the immediate past chair of the firm's diversity committee.

In addition to this distinguished career in private practice, Brian has also been extremely active in public service. He has graciously served on the boards of several nonprofit organizations, including Catholic Charities of New Orleans, The Pro Bono Project, Teach for America for the South Louisiana Region, and The Metropolitan Crime Commission, for which he served as vice chair. Additionally, he has given back to the legal community by serving on the board of directors for the New Orleans Chapter of the Federal Bar Association.

Finally, Brian's impressive academic credentials have also prepared him to serve Louisiana's Middle District. He received his bachelor of science, Xavier University in 1982. He received his J.D. from the Southern University School of Law in 1985 where he served as editor-in-chief of the Southern University Law Review and his master's of law with concentration in international and comparative law from Georgetown University Law Center in 2000.

With these credentials, firm roots Louisiana's Middle District, and a long and impressive career in the U.S. Department of Justice, Brian Jackson is truly ready to hit the ground running as district court judge.

Elizabeth Erny Foote is an experienced attorney with 30 years of experience in Federal litigation. She is a partner in the Smith Foote Law firm in Alexandria, LA, where she primarily practices civil litigation. She has had extensive experience in Federal court throughout her career, having litigated in all three Federal Court Districts of Louisiana, in addition to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeal.

In addition to this outstanding private practice, Beth has proven her dedication to the legal profession through her service to the Louisiana State Bar Association.

In addition to this outstanding private practice, Beth has proven her dedication to the legal profession through her service to the Louisiana State Bar Association, with which she has been actively involved since 1985 and is currently the immediate past president. In 1994, she became the first woman to serve as an officer in the Louisiana State Bar association when she was elected treasurer. The same year she received the President's Award for outstanding service.

Beth is truly a respected civic leader throughout Louisiana. In addition to her contributions to the legal field, she has demonstrated her commitment to justice and equality through a number of nonprofits and government initiatives. Her prestigious awards and honors include: the 2004 Alexandria Human Relations Commission Award for her efforts in promoting better understanding and quality of life in her community, the 2004 Louisiana Heroine Award presented by the Louisiana Association of Nonprofit Associations, the 2000 Central Louisiana Woman of the Century Award, and the 1996 Central Louisiana Women Business Owners' "Business Owner Woman of Excellence" Award.

Finally, Beth's impressive academic credentials have prepared her to serve Louisiana's Western District. She received a bachelor of arts from Louisiana State University in 1974, a master's of arts from Duke University in 1975, and a J.D. from Louisiana State University Law School in 1978. She has also been an adjunct professor at the Paul M. Hebert Law Center at LSU, teaching courses in appellate advocacy.

I believe Beth's principled commitment to the field of law, her impressive 30-year career as an attorney, her extensive Federal litigation experience, and her esteemed statewide reputation make her an excellent nominee for judge for Louisiana's Western District.

The time to confirm these two non-controversial nominees is far overdue. I urge my colleagues to confirm these nominees without further delay so that they may begin the important work the people of Louisiana need them to do.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR DAN INOUE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, there are not many lists on which Senator DAN INOUE ranks second. He was Hawaii's first Congressman, and he now is the longest serving Senator from that great State. He is the first Japanese American to serve in the House and first Japanese American to serve in the Senate. He was the first chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence. He has cast more votes than any other Senator west of the Mississippi. We have all heard the stories about his bravery, both legislatively and on the fields of war where, because of his gallantry, he was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor.

But there is one place where he comes in No. 2, though it is a remarkable accomplishment nonetheless. This past Friday, Senator INOUE became the second longest serving U.S. Senator in this Nation's history, passing Senator Strom Thurmond of South Carolina. Every day since Hawaii has been a State, Senator INOUE has proudly represented its citizens in Congress. Every day since January 3, 1963, 46½ years ago, Hawaiians have been proud to call DAN INOUE their Senator. Every day I have had the privilege of knowing him and serving with him, I have been proud to call DAN INOUE my friend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, last October, the Senate had an opportunity to call attention to one of our colleagues who so rarely calls attention to himself when Senator DANIEL INOUE became the third longest-serving Senator in U.S. history. This past Friday, Senator INOUE reached an even loftier milestone when he surpassed Strom Thurmond to become the second-longest serving Senator in history. So we honor him for this remarkable feat of longevity.

Senator INOUE's dedication to the people of Hawaii is legendary, and so is his story. He was only 17 when he heard the sirens over Honolulu and saw the gray planes overhead. But he was old enough to know that life would never be the same.

Sure enough, a few years later, he would be lying in a hospital bed at Percy Jones Army hospital recovering from wounds sustained in a grenade attack in the mountains of northern Italy. It was there that he first met his future colleague, Bob Dole, who evidently mentioned that after the war he planned to go to Congress.

As it turned out, Senator INOUE beat him by a few years, and he has survived him here in the Senate by many more.

For his heroic actions in World War II, Senator INOUE received our Nation's most prestigious award for military valor, and he has earned the admiration of all Americans. DAN INOUE became a member of one of the most decorated U.S. military units in American history and one of its longest-serving, and finest, Senators. So, Senator, thank you for your service, and congratulations on another remarkable achievement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii is recognized.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise to congratulate our senior Senator, my good friend and longtime colleague, Senator DAN INOUE, on his impressive milestone.

On Friday, Senator INOUE became the second-longest-serving Senator in the history of this storied institution.

DAN was sworn into the Senate in 1963, just a few years after Hawaii became a State. At the time, he was the first and only Japanese American to step foot in this room as a Member of this prestigious body. Today, he is the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. DAN INOUE did not just break barriers, he shattered them.

Of course, the Senate is only the most recent chapter in DAN INOUE's lifetime of service to our country, which includes his Medal of Honor service in the Army during World War II, and his service in the Hawaii Territorial Legislature and the U.S. House of Representatives.

Hawaii may be the youngest State in this great country, but as Senator INOUE's milestone demonstrates, our contributions continue to shape the United States of America.

From President Barack Obama, who grew up not far from Senator INOUE's childhood home on the island of Oahu, to each teacher, soldier, construction worker, and farmer, we are proud of the many accomplishments of Hawaii's people. We are proud to be the 50th State, and we are proud of Senator INOUE's long career serving our Nation.

Aloha and congratulations, DAN.

TAX BREAK REPEAL

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, I have a pending amendment to the tax extenders bill and want to say a few words on that.

At a time when we have a record-breaking $13 trillion national debt and an unsustainable Federal deficit, at a time when two out of every three corporations in America paid no Federal income taxes between 1998 and 2005, at a time when ExxonMobil, the most profitable corporation in the history of the world, not only paid no Federal income taxes in 2009 but actually got a $156 million refund from the IRS, at a time when we desperately need to end our dependence on fossil fuel and transform our energy system, the amendment I am offering, along with Senator WYDEN, Senator WHITEHOUSE, Senator MENENDEZ, and Senator LAUTENBERG, is simple and straightforward.

This amendment simply repeals over $35 billion in tax breaks to the oil and gas industry, all of which were recommended for elimination in President Obama's fiscal year 2011 budget, which the Joint Committee on Taxation has estimated would raise over $35 billion in a 10-year period.

To put this in perspective, the taxpayer dollars saved by repealing these tax breaks represents about 1 percent of the total projected revenue of the oil and gas industry over this same time period. In other words, the cost of repealing these tax breaks for the oil and gas industry is negligible.

More than $25 billion of the money saved under this amendment would be used to reduce the deficit. I hear my friends coming down every day, appropriately, talking about our record-breaking deficit and our huge national debt. Mr. President, $25 billion in this amendment is used for deficit reduction.

Mr. President, $10 billion would be invested in the highly successful Energy Efficiency and Conservation Block Grant Program over a 5-year period, which would go to 50 States in this country to help them move forward in terms of energy efficiency and sustainable energy.

This amendment has widespread support throughout this country from organizations representing millions of Americans, including the League of Conservation Voters, the Sierra Club, the American Council for an Energy Efficient Economy, Friends of the Earth, the Union of Concerned Scientists, Physicians for Social Responsibility, the American Public Health Association, moveon.org, Environment America, Oceana, 1 Sky, Greenpeace, Public Citizen, the Center for Biological Diversity, the Conservation Law Foundation, and 350.org.

In addition, the Energy Efficiency and Conservation Block Grant funding this amendment would provide is strongly supported by the U.S. Conference of Mayors, the National League of Cities, the National Association of State Energy Officials, and the National Association of Development Organizations, and I am pleased to report that Taxpayers for Common Sense and the National Wildlife Federation strongly support repealing the oil and gas tax breaks this amendment would eliminate.

Let me briefly explain why this amendment needs to be included in this overall legislation. First, there is no debate; everybody here understands we have to address the deficit crisis and the $13 trillion national debt we face. Well, I say to my friends: If you are serious about doing this and doing it in a way that doesn't decimate the middle class or working families, this amendment is a good step forward: $25 billion in deficit reduction over a 10-year period is significant and it would help us address a major crisis.

Secondly, we all understand—or I hope we all understand—we have to reform the Tax Code, which is grossly unfair today. We must make the Tax Code fairer and more equitable for ordinary Americans and, in my view, that means ending the absurdity of seeing large corporations, enormously profitable corporations, not pay their fair share of taxes and, in some cases, not paying any taxes at all. Each and every year, large and profitable corporations all over this country are able to avoid paying billions of dollars in Federal income taxes through loopholes in the Tax Code and generous tax breaks. This is simply unacceptable, it is unfair especially with a record-breaking deficit, it is very poor public policy, and it has to be changed.

To highlight how absurd this situation has become, take a look at the August 2008 report on the subject by the Government Accountability Office or the GAO. According to this report—and I hope Americans hear this—two out of every three corporations in the United States paid no Federal income taxes from 1998 to 2005—two out of three. Amazingly these corporations had a combined $2.5 trillion in sales but paid no income taxes to the IRS. This statistic includes one out of four large corporations. That is according to the GAO.

Further, according to a report from the Citizens for Tax Justice, 82 Fortune 500 companies in America paid:

zero or less in federal income taxes in at least one year from 2001 to 2003.

I am thinking now about working people in the State of Vermont and in the State of New Mexico or in Oklahoma, where people are making 10, 12 bucks an hour; people are working 40, 50, 60 hours a week; people who are paying their fair share of taxes. Yet we end up having these large multinational corporations making billions of dollars every year in profits and then they avoid paying their fair share of taxes. That is an issue we have to address.

This same report from Citizens for Tax Justice states:

In the years they paid no income tax, these companies earned $102 billion in U.S. profits.

How is that? Not a bad deal: $102 billion in profits, zero income taxes.

But instead of paying $35.6 billion in income taxes as the statutory 35 percent corporate tax rate seems to require, these companies generated so many excess tax breaks that they received outright tax rebate checks from the U.S. Treasury, totaling $12.6 billion.

How is that? They make huge amounts of money, don't pay any taxes, and then Uncle Sam gives them a rebate. That is quite the scam.

In other words, between 2001 and 2003, 82 of the largest, most profitable corporations in this country received a $12.6 billion tax refund—tax refund—from the IRS when, if they were paying their 35 percent of corporate taxes as the law requires, they would have paid over $35 billion in taxes. That is a net loss to the U.S. Treasury of $48 billion.

It is not just Bernie Sanders who has strong concerns about this issue. The issue of abusive corporate tax breaks has even gotten the attention of Forbes Magazine.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SANDERS. I will yield in a few minutes and be happy to discuss this issue with my friend.

Mr. INHOFE. Just one short question. Is the Senator talking about amendment No. 4318?

Mr. SANDERS. I am, but not yet. I will get to that in a moment.

Mr. INHOFE. OK.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, the issue of abusive corporate tax breaks has even gotten the attention of Forbes Magazine, which reported on April 1, 2010—this is Forbes Magazine—Forbes 500, dynamic capitalism, Forbes Magazine, and this is what they say on April 1, 2010:

As you work on your taxes this month, here's something to raise your hackles: Some of the world's biggest, most profitable corporations enjoy a far lower tax rate than you do—that is, if they pay taxes at all.

Forbes Magazine. This is not one of the more progressive journals in America.

So enough is enough. We can and must reduce the deficit in a way that does not harm the American middle class. Making sure that large and profitable corporations are not able to avoid paying taxes could significantly reduce the deficit. It is not the only thing we have to do, but it would be an important step forward.

As a first step in this direction, the amendment I am proposing today goes after the three most generous tax breaks enjoyed by the oil and gas industry and would raise over $35 billion in revenue over a 10-year period—$35 billion, 10 years. All of these tax breaks were recommended for elimination in President Obama's fiscal year 2011 budget request.

Specifically, this amendment eliminates the expensing of intangible drilling costs to raise over $10.9 billion. It eliminates percentage depletion for oil and gas while saving over $9.6 billion; and it eliminates the so-called manufacturing tax deduction for oil and gas production, saving over $14.7 billion over the next decade, according to the Joint Committee on Taxation.

I want my colleagues to take a look at this chart, because what this chart tells us is that during the last 10 years, the five largest oil companies—ExxonMobil, Shell, BP, Chevron, Texaco, and ConocoPhillips—earned over $750 billion in profits—10-year period, $750 billion, the top five oil companies. During the first quarter of this year, big oil's profits increased by 85 percent. Providing tax breaks to this profitable industry at a time of record-breaking deficits simply does not make sense. We can't afford to do it.

Let me give one example of the absurdity of continuing to provide tax breaks to the oil and gas industry. I want my colleagues to take a look at this chart right here. As we all know, ExxonMobil was the most profitable corporation in the history of the world from 2006 through 2008, making $40 billion in profits in 2006, $41 billion in 2007, and $45 billion in 2008. Not bad. These profits, among other things, enabled Exxon to provide a $398 million retirement package to its former CEO, Lee Raymond.

In 2009, one of the most economically difficult years since the Great Depression—millions of people losing their jobs, their homes, their savings—ExxonMobil was still able to make $19 billion in profits in the midst of a severe recession.

I have a question for my friends on both sides of the aisle to consider: Out of that $19 billion profit, how much did ExxonMobil pay in taxes to the IRS? How much did they pay? How many billions of dollars? How many hundreds of millions of dollars did they pay? Well, the answer is: Zero, not one red nickel.

So all over America, working families are struggling to keep their heads above water. They pay their taxes. Yet we have a corporation, the most profitable in the history of the country, that last year made $19 billion in profit, and they didn't pay a nickel in taxes.

But that is not, as they say, the whole story. It gets worse than that.

As this chart right here on my right shows, ExxonMobil reported to the SEC that not only did it avoid paying any Federal income taxes, it actually received a $156 million refund from the IRS. Twenty-two percent of the children in this country live in poverty. We have record-breaking deficits. We have a $13 trillion national debt, and ExxonMobil receives $156 million in a tax refund after making $19 billion in profits. This has to stop.

This amendment I am offering would begin to make sure that ExxonMobil pays at least a minimal amount of their record-breaking profits in taxes to the Federal Government. That is the very least we can do.

But ExxonMobil is not the only corporation enjoying these tax breaks. Chevron, the fourth most profitable oil company in America, a company that made a $10 billion profit last year when other companies were fighting to stay alive, reported to the SEC that it received a $19 million refund from the IRS. This is Chevron. I know. It is not as much as ExxonMobil, but a $19 million refund after you make $10 billion in profits, that is not too shabby.

Valero Energy, the 25th largest company in America with $68 billion in sales last year, received a $157 million refund check from the IRS, and over the past 3 years it received a $134 million tax break from the oil and gas manufacturing tax deduction that this amendment seeks to eliminate. And on and on it goes. ConocoPhillips, et cetera, et cetera.

Let me very briefly turn to what this amendment would do with the revenues. In terms of deficit reduction, as I have indicated, the benefits are substantial. As we all know, the underlying bill we are debating today, which I support, would increase the deficit by about $87 billion over 10 years. This amendment, my amendment, would cut that by about a third—$25 billion over 10 years. This amendment importantly would also invest $10 billion into the Energy Efficiency and Conservation Block Grant Program which, as I mentioned earlier, will create jobs, save people money on their fuel bills, and help transform our energy system away from fossil fuels.

I get a little bit tired of hearing my friends come to the floor of the Senate talking about the need to reduce our deficit. I get a little bit tired of people talking about the need for equity. If we cannot address a situation where some of the most profitable corporations in America pay zero Federal taxes and, in fact, get a tax rebate, then I am not quite sure what this institution is doing.

So we now have an opportunity to move forward, to address our deficit crisis. We have an opportunity to move forward to transform our energy system. We have an opportunity in this amendment to create jobs and break our dependency on fossil fuel.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to a debate on amendment No. 4318; that the time for such debate be limited to half an hour equally divided; that once the time has expired on this debate, the Senate proceed to a vote on amendment No. 4318.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. INHOFE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, I hear my friend's objection. I think that is unfortunate. The American people should be able to have a different vote and debate on this issue. But I hear what the Senator has said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I think the regular order is to go out now. First, I suggest that I will want some time this afternoon to explain what this amendment really does and also to explain in some detail the marginal wells this would affect. The average marginal well in my State of Oklahoma is 2 barrels a day. We are not talking about giants here. This is a totally different situation. We will have an opportunity to pursue that after resuming the regular order.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate stands in recess until 2:15 p.m.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 1:01 p.m., recessed, and reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. BEGICH).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I wish to bring to my colleagues' attention the fact that we have this problem we deal with too often called the alternative minimum tax. I bring it to my colleagues' attention.

Last week, I had an opportunity to address my colleagues on the unfinished tax legislative business. These four items are the unfinished business to which I was referring. The legislation before the Senate deals with only one but, of course, an important piece of the unfinished legislative business. These tax extenders are on their second legislative stop through the Senate.

As the chart shows, the tax extenders, which are overdue by almost half a year, are not alone in that unfinished business. There are three other major areas of unfinished business. As we can see from the chart, we have the death tax with which we have not dealt. Another area is the 2001 to 2003 tax rate cuts and family tax relief package. Then the third area is the AMT patch, the alternative minimum tax.

Over the past few years, the AMT is frequently a subject of many of my addresses to my colleagues. I intend to keep talking about the AMT until this Congress actually takes action on reforming the AMT.

Instead of taking action, Congress this session has done absolutely nothing, and the problem continues to get worse for at least 26 million American families—let me emphasize middle-class American families—who will be caught in this AMT trap and, as a matter of fact, are now already caught.

Those being caught or are caught are the families who make estimated tax payments and who will be making their second payment this very day.

Last year, in 2009, a bit over 4 million families were hit by the alternative minimum tax. I think this was 4 million families too many, but it is considerably better than the more than 26 million additional families who will be hit this year in 2010 if Congress does not take action.

The reason we are experiencing this large increase this year is that over the last 9 years Congress has passed legislation that would temporarily—and only temporarily—increase the amount of income exempt from the alternative minimum tax. These temporary exemption increases have prevented millions of middle-class American families from falling prey to the alternative minimum tax until right now.

While I have always fought for these temporary exemptions, I believe the AMT ought to be permanently repealed. One reason I have previously given for permanent repeal is that it may be difficult for Congress to revisit the alternative minimum tax on a temporary basis every year. Of course, this current situation, now 6 months into this year, proves me right. Congress has yet to undertake any meaningful action on the alternative minimum tax.

The budget resolution, passed well over a year ago, provided revenue room for a short-term extension of the alternative minimum tax patch. That was a lot less than what President Obama's budget did, which made the patch permanent.

On this point, since too often people think I do not agree with President Obama enough, this is one point where I believe the tax policy of President Obama has it exactly right.

About 18 months ago, much to the criticism of some on the other side, I made the 2009 AMT patch an issue in the economic stimulus legislation. The reason I did is that 24 million middle-class families would have, on average, paid $2,400 more in income taxes for 2009 if the patch had been abandoned. For those 24 million people, paying $2,400 more into the Federal Treasury would have been a real hurt. My 2009 AMT patch amendment was adopted in the stimulus legislation by the Finance Committee. That was 18 months ago.

Despite assurances the AMT relief is an important issue, nothing has actually been put forward as a serious legislative solution this year. Again, we can see the checklist chart. There has been no House committee markup or floor action, no Senate committee markup or floor action. This year is almost half done. A theoretical discussion is not a substitute for real action, to which anyone making a quarterly payment today will attest.

I am hopeful I can get folks on Capitol Hill rethinking about the AMT and realize that it is a real problem right now. Everyone seems to agree that something needs to be done quickly, but the discussion does not go any further than just discussion.

The second quarterly payment is due today. Today taxpayers across the country are under a legal requirement to pay their estimated taxes, and with it the additional money that would be owed because the AMT has not been patched. They would use form 1040-ES. I bet I will be here September 15 when the third payment comes due saying largely the same thing.

Congress does not seem to be under any pressure to actually take action. Many on the other side insist that, unlike new spending proposals or extensions of existing programs, AMT reform should happen only if it is revenue neutral. That means any revenues—I want to put quotes around these words—any revenues “not collected” through reform or repeal of the AMT must be offset by new taxes from somewhere else.

Notice I said “collected,” and I did not say “lost.” This distinction is important for the simple reason that the revenues we do not collect as a result of AMT relief are not, in fact, lost to the Treasury. The AMT collects revenues it was never supposed to collect in the first place. In other words, middle-class income people were not supposed to pay this tax in the first place—that is that 24 million—because this AMT was originally conceived as a mechanism to ensure that high-income taxpayers were not able to completely eliminate their tax liability. From that standpoint, even the AMT has failed because in 2004, IRS Commissioner Everson told the Finance Committee the same percentage of taxpayers continue to pay no Federal income tax as they did back in 1969. Even I think, on raw numbers, it is a much larger number. Back then it was only 155 taxpayers.

Today, at least 24 million to 26 million middle-class families are in these alternative minimum tax crosshairs. That is quite a change from the 155 rich people in 1969 who were not paying any tax, the reason for the alternative minimum tax to be passed in the first place.

Finally, if we offset revenues not collected as a result of AMT repeal or reform, total Federal revenues over the long term are projected to push through the 30-year historical average and then keep going.

The AMT then is a completely failed policy that is projected to bring in future revenues that it was never designed to collect in the first place.

President Obama met those of us who favor repeal partway by staking out a position on AMT reform during his 2008 campaign. His position provided for a permanent AMT patch. His budgets have maintained that position.

While permanent repeal without offsetting is the best option, we absolutely must do something to protect taxpayers and do it now, even if it involves a temporary solution, such as an increase in the exemption amount.

Of course, if we do that, we are going to be in the same fix next year, and I will be making that same point again.

Today, Tuesday, June 15, 2010, taxpayers making quarterly payments are going to once again discover that the AMT is neither the subject of an academic seminar nor a future problem that we can put off dealing with. The AMT is a real problem right now, and if this Congress is serious about tax fairness, it needs to stand up and take action.

JOB CREATION

Mr. President, I wish to address the Senate for a minute on another issue about how many jobs the stimulus bill created.

In recent weeks, a number of my colleagues have come to the floor to proclaim the success of the massive $862 billion stimulus bill Congress enacted in 2009. Although the number of private sector jobs has increased by only about half a million since 2009, they continue to insist the stimulus bill has created millions of new jobs. How do they justify these claims?

The stimulus bill requires certain recipients of stimulus funds to report the number of jobs they have created or saved or, more accurately, they report the number of jobs funded with the stimulus dollars.

The stimulus bill also requires the Congressional Budget Office to issue a quarterly report on these numbers. The Congressional Budget Office is careful to point out that the number of jobs being reported by stimulus recipients is not a comprehensive estimate of the economic impact of the stimulus bill. According to the Congressional Budget Office, the actual numbers could be higher or lower.

According to CBO “estimating the law’s overall effects on employment requires a more comprehensive analysis than the recipients’ reports provide.”

For this analysis, CBO relies on a computer model. In other words, CBO does not look at the actual jobs data. Instead, it looks at a model of the economy.

CBO is very upfront about all of this. CBO used a computer model to predict how many jobs the stimulus bill would create before it was enacted into law. Now the stimulus bill is, in fact, law, and CBO is using a computer model to tell us it did just what they said it would do—create jobs.

Why would CBO rely on a model instead of actual data? According to CBO—and I have a three- or four-sentence quote here:

Data on actual output and employment are not as helpful in determining the stimulus bill’s economic effects because isolating those effects would require knowing what path the economy would have taken in the absence of the law. Because that path cannot be observed, there is no way to be certain about how the economy would have performed if the legislation had not been enacted.

My judgment is that CBO is saying this: CBO doesn’t know how much better or worse the economy would have been if the stimulus bill had not been enacted. That means the Congressional Budget Office also doesn’t know how much better or worse the economy is now as a result of the stimulus bill. So basically CBO is saying: Trust us—or more specifically: Trust our model. But if the model was wrong to begin with, then wouldn’t it still be wrong? According to the Congressional Budget

Office, their model relies on historical relationships to determine estimated multipliers for each of several categories of spending and tax provisions in the stimulus bill. The problem is that there is no way to know whether these historical relationships remain constant over time or whether they change under different economic circumstances.

In short, the jobs numbers attributed to the stimulus bill are based on assumptions which may or may not have any basis in reality.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, George Santayana wrote:

Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it.

Today, we must remember the past. We must learn from past mistakes, and we must do our best to avoid repeating them.

In its response to the Great Depression of the 1930s, the Federal Government made a serious mistake. It is important to remember this past so we are not condemned to repeat it. The stock market crashed in 1929. By 1933, the unemployment rate reached a high of 25 percent. A few years later—4 years later, to be precise—in 1937, the economy was rebounding. The unemployment rate had fallen to 14 percent, gross domestic product was growing at an average rate, if you can believe it, of 9 percent a year, and the stock market had more than doubled over the past 4 years. That was 1937. The economy was on the road to recovery. But this exceptional economic growth did not just happen. It resulted from strong actions by the Federal Government. From 1933 to 1937, for example, the United States dramatically increased the money supply. Lower interest rates and greater credit availability helped to stimulate spending and economic growth. New Deal programs also helped. Spending was modest but significant compared to the magnitude of the Great Depression. But the response provided a notable boost to the economy, and it helped instill confidence in the Federal Government's ability to tackle the Depression.

But in 1937, after 4 years of growth, the government made a mistake. Concerned about short-term deficits, what did it do? It began to cut spending and it began to raise taxes. A bonus for World War I veterans, which provided a boost in consumer spending, was allowed to expire in 1937. Social security taxes were collected for the first time in 1937. And marginal tax rates increased dramatically. What happened? This premature attempt to reduce deficits pushed the economy back over the edge. It was premature. The jobless rate shot back up to 19 percent. In 1938, gross domestic product fell by 3 percent. Shortsighted policy decisions caused a double-dip. The mistaken desire to balance the budget too quickly effectively lengthened the Great Depression by 2 more years.

I understand the desire today to reduce deficits. I share that desire. We do need to put in place deficit reduction that will take effect after the recovery has kicked in. But we must also learn from the 1937 history. We must not repeat the mistake that led to the double-dip downturn of the late 1930s. If we were to dramatically cut spending or increase taxes to reduce the deficit in the short run, it would run the risk of causing a double-dip in this great recession.

Today, the economy remains too fragile to begin cutting back. Unemployment stands at 9.7 percent. The May jobs report was disappointing. The private sector created only 41,000 new jobs. In total, 15 million Americans still remain out of work, and half those unemployed have been unemployed for more than 6 months. Gross domestic product grew 3 percent in the first quarter of 2010, but this was down from 5.6 percent in the fourth quarter of 2009.

Just as in 1937, we are in a recovery period. That is true. And just as in 1937, it is a recovery that is showing signs of weakness. If we act recklessly today, we risk a double-dip recession. If we adopt a constrictive fiscal policy in the short run, we risk prolonging the great recession for years to come. We cannot act without regard to the consequences of our actions.

Make no mistake, we must tackle and should tackle our long-term deficits. That is clear. And that is why one of the goals of the President's Commission on Fiscal Responsibility and Reform is to "achieve fiscal sustainability over the long run." We do need to act aggressively to reduce our long-term deficits as the economy enters a phase of expansion. But first we must pull ourselves out of this great recession.

One of the best things we can do to facilitate the delicate recovery is to pass the American Jobs and Closing Tax Loopholes Act before us today. This bill extends tax cuts for families and businesses that will help them in these difficult times, and this bill sustains vital social safety net programs that will also help foster economic growth.

We have made the mistake of cutting back too soon once before, and we must not make it again. The Thune amendment, which will be before us in the not too distant future this week, will move in the wrong direction. Instead of helping to create economic demand, the Thune amendment would curtail aggregate demand by more than $50 billion. Instead of continuing the good the Recovery Act has done, the Thune amendment would chop it off.

The Thune amendment would, among other things, cancel unspent and unallocated mandatory spending in the Recovery Act—stop it. That spending is working. The Recovery Act is working. The Federal Reserve and many independent economists have credited the Recovery Act with playing an important role in stabilizing the economy.

This is what the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office said in its most recent report:

CBO estimates that in the first quarter of calendar year 2010, [the Recovery Act's] policies raised the level of real . . . gross domestic product . . . by between 1.7 percent and 4.2 percent, lowered the unemployment rate by between 0.7 percentage points and 1.5 percentage points, increased the number of people employed by between 1.2 million and 2.8 million, and increased the number of full-time equivalent jobs by 1.8 million to 4.1 million compared with what those amounts would have been otherwise.

That is what CBO says about the recovery. And the Congressional Budget Office projects that the Recovery Act will continue to create jobs. It projects that the Recovery Act will create the peak number of jobs in the third quarter of this year and then begin to taper off. But we do not want to abruptly cut that job creation off. In this fragile economy, the last thing we should do is to cut back on this proven job creator. It works. It has been working.

We passed the Recovery Act to give a needed boost to our economy. The bill was designed to work over 2 years. That was the intent of it. We have successfully started down the road to recovery, but if we were to withdraw these critical funds, we would risk causing further damage to our fragile economy. Revoking the Recovery Act funds now would send exactly the wrong signal to the American economy and to unemployed Americans.

The Thune amendment would also cut other valuable spending programs. The Thune amendment's spending cuts are arbitrary and they are restrictive. For example, one provision in the Thune substitute amendment would freeze the salaries of all Federal employees except for Members of the armed services. But what about civilian defense workers? What about law enforcement? What about border protection?

Another provision would cap the total number of Federal employees at current levels. If an agency needed to hire a new employee, it would first need to find an existing employee to fire. This would dramatically reduce the flexibility of agencies to make hiring decisions.

The Thune substitute amendment would also cut discretionary spending by 5 percent across the board for all agencies except the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Defense. Apparently, this 5-percent cut would apply to the Department of Homeland Security. It would apply to Immigration and Customs Enforcement. Apparently, it would apply to all the intelligence agencies, just to name a few.

The Thune amendment would also, by the way, rescind $80 billion in appropriated but unspent Federal funds. But just because the funds have not yet been obligated does not mean they are superfluous. For example, when money is appropriated to build a battleship, it does not all get obligated in the first year. By cutting funds that have not yet been obligated, it would adversely affect the construction of that battleship.

I support finding ways to make our government more efficient, but these cuts are arbitrary. They are inappropriately restrictive.

The Thune amendment would also make changes to the new health care law that would leave more Americans without insurance. The Thune amendment does this by expanding the affordability exception to the individual mandate for purchasing health insurance. This expansion would eliminate coverage for millions of Americans. It would strike at the heart of health care reform. And the Congressional Budget Office tells us it would also increase premiums for everybody else.

The Thune amendment, just to repeat, would increase premiums for millions of Americans who would have health insurance. The irony of this proposal in the Thune amendment is that it raises money for the government because the government would not provide as much in tax credits to Americans to help them buy insurance. That is the irony. But Congress has just enacted health care reform. Congress just expressed our Nation's commitment to helping all Americans to buy health insurance. We should let the new health care law take effect.

The Thune amendment would also propose changes to our medical liability system that the Senate has rejected many times over the years. The Thune amendment would cap damages and make other changes to State laws. This is not the solution to medical malpractice.

While the Congressional Budget Office says these kinds of ideas would generate savings, we should ask: What is the cost of those savings? What would be the cost to patients? What would be the cost to States?

The same studies upon which CBO relied in calculating its cost estimate point out that certain tort reform policies may also increase the number of risky procedures performed. And these policies may lead to more patient injuries and more patient deaths.

One study upon which CBO relied said that these policies would lead to a 0.2-percent increase in mortality.

That sounds an awfully high price to pay.

Imposing national tort reform standards flies in the face of our Nation's civil liability system. That system has always been forged at the State level. And national damage caps would put patient safety at risk.

The Thune amendment employs some of the offsets that it does because it drops the oilspill liability tax. Imagine that: The proponents of the Thune amendment would rather put the recovery at risk by cutting back the Recovery Act, they would rather cut health insurance coverage in health reform, and they would rather expose patients to greater risk. They would rather do all these things than raise taxes on big oil, to pay for oilspills.

And the Thune amendment employs some of the offsets that it does, because it drops some of the tax loophole closers in the underlying substitute amendment. The underlying substitute amendment closes loopholes in the Tax Code that unfairly benefit certain individuals.

One such loophole is carried interest. The underlying substitute removes an inequity of the Tax Code that allows investment managers who operate through partnerships to have the income that they earn for their services taxed at half the tax rate of other working individuals.

Here's how the carried interest tax loophole works. An investment manager joins a partnership with some investors. But the investment manager does not provide any capital. The investment manager provides services.

The investment manager contracts to receive compensation not in the form of wage income, but in the form of a share of the partnership. That way, the investment manager gets to pay lower capital gains tax rates on the investment manager's income, rather than the higher wage tax rates that the rest of Americans pay.

The underlying substitute says: No longer should we allow investment managers to have a better tax rate than teachers or doctors or firefighters. Our amendment plugs this tax loophole. But the Thune amendment would strike that provision. The Thune amendment would allow that tax loophole to continue.

The underlying substitute also includes an important provision that closes another serious inequity in the Tax Code.

Lawyers, doctors, and other professionals who operate as partners or sole proprietors are currently subject to Social Security taxes on their service income up to $106,800. And they are subject to Medicare taxes on all their service income. Everybody is. But some doctors and lawyers organize themselves as an S corporation and they can pay themselves an artificially low salary. That way, they can avoid paying Social Security or Medicare taxes on much of the income generated by their services. That is just not fair.

And what is more, it hurts the Social Security and Medicare trust funds.

The choice of entity should not affect an individual's tax liability for his or her services.

Unfortunately, Senator THUNE's amendment does not close this loophole. The Thune amendment would strike this loophole closer in the underlying substitute.

The underlying substitute would also close several foreign tax loopholes.

The Senate Finance Committee developed these loophole closers jointly with the House Ways and Means Committee, with the assistance of the Treasury Department.

These loophole-closers would shut down highly structured and complex transactions implemented by multinational corporations to avoid paying U.S. tax.

These tax benefits claimed by the multinational corporations were clearly not contemplated when Congress passed the tax law.

Closing these loopholes would preserve and create jobs here in America. Closing these loopholes would discourage U.S. multinational corporations from shipping American jobs overseas.

Permitting the continued exploitation of these loopholes would only encourage U.S. multinationals to invest additional capital overseas, rather than here in America. Allowing these loopholes to continue would result in the loss of American jobs.

The underlying substitute amendment tackles these loopholes. Senator THUNE's amendment, on the other hand, ignores them. By not addressing them, the Thune amendment would allow this irresponsibility to continue.

And so, the Thune amendment would put the recovery at risk by curtailing the Recovery Act. It would cut the number of Americans with health insurance and raise premiums. It would nationalize medical malpractice law, putting patients at risk. And it would protect big oil and multinational corporations that ship their jobs overseas.

I urge my colleagues to oppose the Thune amendment.

And I urge my colleagues to support the bill before us. Let us protect and strengthen this fragile economic recovery. Let us preserve and create jobs, here in America. And let us enact the American Jobs and Closing Tax Loopholes Act.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I know Senator THUNE will be here in a moment. I saw him just a while ago.

One of the things hurting our economy is that Congress is sending no message whatsoever that we are serious about reducing the uncontrollable debt that every economist says is unsustainable, and that this is a cloud over our economic recovery. The sooner we quit thinking we can make the economy rebound by just spending a few more billion dollars and increasing our debt, the better off we will be and we will get on a sound track to go forward.

I know good people can disagree, but I believe very strongly in this, and I just wanted to share that thought.

OILSPILL IN ALABAMA

I would like to make a few brief comments about the oilspill in the Gulf of Mexico, and my home State of Alabama. I was there Friday and visited Orange Beach, Gulf Shores, Dauphin Island, and Bayou La Batre, examined the beaches and talked with our good mayors and other officials who are there. There are a few things I would like to share that indicate we are not where we need to be.

I have not been one who wants to run out and blame the President for everything. But I do believe as we are now going into day 57 that we need to understand our response is not working well. It could be much better.

For example, I visited Mayor Tony Kennon and his team in Orange Beach. Perdido Pass has a very strong current. You would think you could put up boom and stop oil from coming in. They told us oil was out there. They were expecting it to come in, maybe the biggest amount they had expected since the beginning of the spill. It was expected to hit the coast this past Saturday or Sunday, and it did indeed hit. The city is developing their own plan with their own engineer about how to deal with the currents and the flow of oil to keep it out of the estuaries that are inside of Perdido Pass.

It is complicated. They had a top engineer, Henry Seawell, one of Alabama's best. He was there working on it. I just happen to know him. But the Coast Guard was not there; BP was not there. The mayor said:

You know, we feel like we are not even at the table, we are not at the children's table. They are not talking to us. But we know more about how to deal with this pass than anybody else in the U.S. Government because we have been working on it, it is our area, and we are trying to protect it.

Sure enough, the oil came. We were behind schedule. They started late. Nobody had done anything until the city started, apparently a good bit of oil got in and that is not good. It also got on the beach. We can clean that up pretty quickly, however a lot hit the beach.

Then a little further down the beach, at Gulf Shores, we had a similar discussion. I went to Fort Morgan, across the mouth of the Mobile Bay where Admiral Farragut sailed in, and we went across to Dauphin Island. The mayor there, Jeff Collier, had some of the same concerns as Mayor Robert Craft in Gulf Shores. Then I went up and met with Mayor Stan Wright, the mayor of Bayou La Batre, himself a seafood processor. He noted to me, and has repeatedly stated, that Bayou La Batre probably represents the largest seafood processing on the entire gulf coast. They are basically being shut down, and a lot of people who work there are losing their jobs. They are low-income workers who do not have extra money to live on, and they are hurting, really hurting. If we are going to receive money from BP, they need to get it out there to the people right now, before they lose their homes or have their power cut off. The mayor told me how people are calling him about their electricity being cut off. It is not a little matter. The whole situation is a big deal.

I am glad the President has gone to the gulf coast. I am hopeful tonight we will hear some good ideas for progress. I just wanted to share one thing that struck me very vividly. Mayor Kennon's team in Orange Beach told us they had seen a strip of compact oil from the air and a boat about 6 miles offshore. It had the red color, thick process—a strip about 30 miles wide and 2 miles long. This was Friday morning. It was expected to hit Friday night or early Saturday morning. Nobody knew for sure. But it had been out there for a number of days.

So we are asking, Why don't we put a skimmer there? This is the only thing coming in that threatens the beaches. Apparently there were two strips of this offshore at some distance. It represents a significant threat. You could see that threat getting closer and closer. The obvious thought—Mr. President, having been from Alaska, you know the importance of these matters—if you had a good skimmer—where two boats pull the boom and direct the oil into a central location, then you can get it out and put it in a barge or tanker.

There was not any. It would have been rather easy, I suggest, with a good skimmer, to have gone out, with plenty of time to scoop up almost all of that oil or at least a big portion of it. That was not done. It kept coming in, and coming in, and basically by Saturday it was hitting the beaches.

You ask, where are they? We are not talking with one another enough, it seems to me. It does appear there are more skimmers, more boom, more vessels, equipment, and pumps available around the world that could be called on to assist, and we have not accepted all offers of assistance. Nor have we, apparently, sought to lease, buy or purchase the boom, pumps, and skimmers that might help us.

I was just looking at a press release today that stated, Admiral Allen, the national incident commander, Provides Guidance to Ensure Expedited Jones Act Waiver Processing Should It Be Needed."

He says he will process any requests for waivers of the Jones Act.

For some reason the admiral is still talking about waivers and offering to expedite them. Who is requesting them? Why doesn't he request it? If there is a ship that can skim, it can be brought down to the gulf coast, and it would make a big difference. In fact, I saw the admiral, I believe, the day before yesterday on the television say we need to do a better job. This would have been Monday. We need to do a better job of intercepting the oil between the spill site and the shore.

Good. I thought it might be harder to do. I thought it might be little splotches here and there, all over, and it would be impossible to scoop it all up. But if it is moving, and it tends to move in lines and fairly compact 30-foot strips, then with good equipment we can make a big dent and just stop it.

So I don't know what the problem is. But we do know 17 countries have offered to help, however we only have two skimmers, as I understand it, in the gulf, and those are from Mexico—which we are glad to have. Pumps have been offered. I do not believe we have taken advantage of that. It takes some pretty good pumping equipment to get this oil soaked up, and only 600,000 feet of boom have been received from abroad. The UK has also offered us dispersants, which we have not taken.

I don't know what all the details are, but it seems to me that we can and must do a better job of coordinating. We need to ensure people who need resources are paid now, and we need to understand that there is great potential for effective skimming to occur where the oil has formulated and configured in groups so it can be skimmed. That apparently is more feasible than a lot of people understand. We need to be focusing on that.

The people along the gulf coast are upset about it. One mayor told me: I am a man of good judgment. I am worried about BP's slow response. They talk about responding. They talk about paying, but not enough payment is actually getting out where we have clear cases of substantial losses. Of course, the economy is not where it has been and where we need to see it develop. The beach areas probably wouldn't have been as strong this year as previous years because of the economic downturn. But the testimony from people at public meetings I have attended is crystal clear that we have almost a 50-percent drop in reservations, a 50-percent drop in bookings, and this ripples through the entire community. We already have real estate problems. We already have a little decline in beach attendance. Now we have all this horrible news on the TV and large amounts of cancellations. Some people do need money now. This process needs to be accelerated, and I hope we will hear something in some of what the President tells us tonight. I think he has heard that. He has been down to the gulf coast. He has talked to people. He probably has a better understanding today, after we are 2 months into it, than he previously had.

Maybe we can make this system work a little better. I don't only want to complain. I am thankful the President is showing attention. I am thankful he has stepped out and is showing some leadership. But for some reason, there still seems to be a lack of connection between the talk up at the top and what is happening on the ground. I have been there. I have talked to people. People are not getting money. People are in serious crisis already, people who would be entitled to receive monies. I don't think BP should pay out money fraudulently. They don't need to pay those who don't deserve it. They ought to be careful in how they handle these payments. But for the most part, people are making legitimate claims. Some of them are desperate now. I don't think we have a unified effective plan to intercept as much of the oil as we could offshore. Nor have we had the kind of support from the Federal Government we would like to see, with scientifically determined processes, placing boom and skimming equipment to stop the flow of the oil, particularly into our estuaries, including Mobile Bay.

Mobile Bay is not that wide of an opening. People thought we could stop it. You could put boom across and stop it. The truth is, with the tides, it is a strong current. Anchors won't hold it. When water moves in, it will go over or under or even break the boom. It is not an easy thing. We need some sort of Chevron-like layers of boom outside the entrance to try to catch as much as we can before it comes in. A little, but I don't think enough, effort has been made. In fact, we now had a significant amount of oil that have gotten into that great estuary.

I wanted to share those thoughts. I believe we can do better. I believe oil production in the gulf is essential for the national interest. I believe this spill, this accident should not have happened. I believe if people had been exceedingly careful and competent in what they did, this would not have happened. I believe after this accident, there is going to be a complete review by every company out there. I think we will have an even lower possibility of accidents in the future. But we need more confidence that blowout preventers work, and that we have safety mechanisms in place. We need more confidence that this will happen. We need to understand there is always a possibility that some sort of blowout or spill will occur, but we can do better to prevent it. We can do better about plugging the leak or capturing the oil where it comes out of the pipe. I believe all of these are possible.

I am not happy. I am disappointed that we weren't better prepared in case such an accident did occur. Very disappointed. I believe the oil industry, in particular BP's plan, as the Mobile Press Register has pointed out, was not well thought out. Their plan talked about what to do with walruses and things such as that. We don't have any walruses on the gulf coast. This was not a well thought out plan. Criticism is justified in many different areas.

I thank the Chair for the opportunity to share my thoughts. Again, I appreciate the President visiting the gulf coast. Hopefully, they are breaking down some of these dysfunctional areas to get us to a higher level of response and effectiveness, and maybe they will also be able to continue to make progress in reducing the amount of flow coming out of this well. Obviously, that is the most critical point.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. GILLIBRAND). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARRASSO. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BARRASSO. Madam President, the tax extenders bill includes a settlement that involves a class action lawsuit that is known as Cobell v. Salazar. The total cost of this settlement is about $3.4 billion. This settlement will affect hundreds of thousands of Indian people across the United States who are class members in this lawsuit. It was signed last December by the Obama administration with the lead plaintiffs and their attorneys. Part of the settlement provides $1.4 billion to individual Indians whose trust assets have been mismanaged by the Federal Government for over 100 years. Another $2 billion would be used by the Department of the Interior to consolidate Indian land ownership to prevent a repeat of these claims.

On Wednesday, June 9, 2010, Attorney General Holder and Secretary Salazar sent letters to the Senate leaders opposing an amendment I filed on Tuesday, June 8. My amendment corrects serious flaws in the settlement. I am going to respond to their letter as well as explain my amendment.

The Attorney General and the Secretary argue that the amendment makes material changes to the settlement that would render it void. To begin with, I must point out that the parties have changed their settlement in material ways several times—several times—since it was announced that the agreement had been reached. Whenever they deem fit, they change it. For the reasons I am about to go into, they should change it again. If they don't, then Congress should act.

In their letter to leadership, the Attorney General and Secretary Salazar say:

The nature of any settlement agreement is that no one gets everything they asked for.

I know the Cobell case has waged on and on in the courts for 14 years. It has been up and down on appeal many times—too many times. In fact, it is on appeal right now. So I support settling this case. I support providing fair compensation to people harmed by decades of Federal mismanagement. I support consolidating the fractionated ownership of land to prevent the recurrence of problems that led to this court case. But I cannot support the settlement as drafted by the administration. It has flaws, and I believe some of them are very serious. All of them can and should be fixed without making major changes to its overall structure. Leaders in Indian country agree.

I ask unanimous consent that a letter dated June 11, 2010, from the National Congress of American Indians to Senator DORGAN and to me be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BARRASSO. Madam President, the National Congress of American Indians' letter states that the changes in my amendment address legitimate concerns that have been raised by tribal leaders and Indian people. The NCAI letter references resolutions passed by the Affiliated Tribes of Northwest Indians and the Great Plains Tribal Chairmen's Association supporting my amendment.

So what does my amendment do? It addresses five significant weaknesses in the settlement. The first issue is attorneys fees. This settlement was signed by the Department of Justice and two of the plaintiffs on December 7, 2009. Originally, the settlement said that Congress had to approve it in 24 days—by New Year's Eve. Well, supporters said there was no time for a hearing; Congress had to act immediately. I disagreed. Any $3.4 billion settlement paid for by taxpayers that affects the lives of hundreds of thousands of people should have a hearing before Congress.

I requested that the Committee on Indian Affairs hold a hearing on the settlement. Chairman DORGAN scheduled one nearly 6 months ago and that hearing was December 17, 2009. During the hearing, it was disclosed that the parties had entered into a separate agreement covering attorneys fees. In the side agreement, the plaintiffs' lawyers agreed not to ask the court for more than $99.9 million in presettlement attorneys' fees and costs, and the administration agreed not to argue that the attorneys should get anything less than $50 million. So, in effect, the two parties quietly agreed that the plaintiffs' attorneys should be paid between $50 million and $100 million.

This separate agreement also provided that when attorneys asked the court for presettlement fees, the attorneys must provide contemporaneous time records, but they said only "where available." This is a very remarkable agreement, especially for a court case that was pretty much all about inadequate government record-keeping in the first place.

What the government has done is agreed not to demand contemporaneously prepared time records when the attorneys ask the court for their fees—fees that will be taken directly out of the funds that are supposed to be distributed to the class members in the suit. This settlement should be about compensating the individual Indians who were harmed by government mismanagement. My amendment requires production of contemporaneous records and it caps the fees at $50 million. Fifty million dollars is an amount that both parties agreed would not be appealed. It is their number, so it must be fair.

Besides the issue of attorneys fees, there have been other concerns raised about the settlement—about the possibility of a multimillion dollar incentive award to named plaintiffs; about the qualification of the bank where the money will be deposited; about the role of Indian tribes and the land consolidation aspect of the settlement; and about the formula for distributing the money. My amendment addresses each of these issues.

The amendment would also require that any "incentive awards" to named plaintiffs be justified by documented expenses. Leading the case of Indian landowners against the government for 14 years has undoubtedly been an exhausting burden and an expensive burden. The named plaintiffs should be allowed to ask the court to have those expenses reimbursed. My amendment would limit any such award to an aggregate amount of $15 million and only for the expenses incurred by the class representatives. This is the amount the plaintiffs told us is their total estimated out-of-pocket expenses. The amendment would allow full reimbursement of these expenses.

My amendment also addresses the selection of the bank that will hold the $1.4 billion in settlement funds. The settlement is especially lax in setting standards to ensure the safety of these funds—lax, I believe, to the point of being irresponsible. My amendment simply requires the court to consider certain factors when approving a proposed bank: experience, a history of regulatory compliance, plus competitive interest rates and fees. These factors are important because if anything happens to the money, then the class members bear the risk of the loss. I cannot fathom why asking the court to simply consider these commonsense protections will void the settlement.

The amendment I have offered will require the Secretary of the Interior to consult with Indian tribes on implementation of the Indian land consolidation program. In order for this $2 billion consolidation program to succeed, the tribal governments should be partners in implementation. The amendment would require that to happen.

Finally, my amendment would provide relief for certain class members for whom the pro rata formula used in the settlement does not work. This formula is simple and will be easy to use. That is why the administration likes it. In many cases, the formula won't work and will lead to unfair results. It is necessary that we create a system for individual class members with unique circumstances to petition the court for a nonstandard settlement payment.

Under my amendment, the court would be provided with broad flexibility to make discretionary awards in appropriate cases.

In closing, I urge Members of the Senate to support this amendment to the Cobell settlement provisions in this measure. My amendment doesn't change the structure of the settlement. It does improve, however, the agreement for the hundreds of thousands of class members covered by the settlement.

What my amendment doesn't do is void the agreement. Let me repeat, my amendment does not void the agreement; it does not void the settlement. Plaintiffs have the ability to void the settlement if they don't believe the changes are in the best interests of the class members. The administration can void it if they don't believe there should be financial standards for selection of the bank that will hold and manage $1.4 billion of settlement funds. By passing this amendment, we will not void the agreement.

Congress has the obligation to never rubberstamp an agreement and to not rubberstamp this agreement.

Adopting my amendment is the right thing to do.

I yield the floor.

EXHIBIT 1

NATIONAL CONGRESS OF AMERICAN INDIANS,
Washington, DC, June 11, 2010.

Re Cobell Settlement and Senator Barrasso's Amendment 4313 to the American Jobs and Closing Tax Loopholes Act of 2010.

Hon. BYRON DORGAN,
Chair, Committee on Indian Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Hon. JOHN BARRASSO,
Vice Chair, Committee on Indian Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN DORGAN AND VICE CHAIRMAN BARRASSO: As you know, a very important vote may soon occur in the Senate. Currently the Senate is considering H.R. 4213, the American Jobs and Closing Tax Loopholes Act of 2010. For Indian people across the country the most important provision in the legislation is Section 607, which would authorize the settlement of the Cobell v. Salazar litigation over federal mismanagement of Indian trust funds. Senator Barrasso has proposed an amendment that would address some concerns about the settlement that have been raised by tribal leaders and Indian people. These are legitimate concerns that have come from the grassroots in Indian country, and it is our hope that the parties and the Senate try to find common ground on these concerns.

The National Congress of American Indians has long supported a settlement of this litigation because it is time to bring justice to Indian people and because the contentious litigation has distracted from efforts to address the many other issues that Indian country faces. When the settlement was first announced in December of 2009, there was a general feeling of elation and relief throughout Indian country. We are extremely grateful to the Administration and to Eloise Cobell and her team for working so hard on this settlement and bringing it to the brink of resolution.

However, we also believe that Ms. Cobell described it well when she said that this is a "bittersweet victory" for Indian country. There is no doubt that the injuries to Indian people have been much greater than the compensation they will receive. In addition, over the past several months, Indian tribes and Indian people have had an opportunity to more closely examine the details of the settlement. Hearings have been held in Congress, and meetings have taken place on reservations across the country. As might be expected with a class action settlement of this size and complexity, the details have generated considerable discussion and some disagreements.

Senator Barrasso has solicited the views of tribal leaders on the details of the settlement and has filed a proposed amendment. The Affiliated Tribes of Northwest Indians and the Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association, two large and well respected regional tribal organizations, have both passed resolutions favoring Senator Barrasso's amendment. A similar resolution has been submitted to NCAI for consideration during our Midyear Session during the week of June 20. However, NCAI's consideration of the resolution may happen after Congress has voted.

As you know, both the Administration and the Cobell plaintiffs have raised concerns that any amendments to the Cobell settlement legislation would render the settlement null and void. We understand the need for the parties to a difficult settlement to adopt this posture. However, we have little doubt that if Congress were to make modest and reasonable adjustments, the parties will readily amend the settlement agreement to conform to the implementing legislation.

NCAI's interest is that Congress passes a settlement that is responsive to legitimate concerns raised by tribal leaders and members of the class, and that a contested floor vote on these issues may not be conducive to our shared goal of settling the litigation. I will briefly address the elements of Senator Barrasso's amendment. Amendment 4313 would:

1. Cap attorneys' fees at $50 million and incentive awards at expenses up to $15 million. The settlement was accompanied by a side agreement that the federal government would not contest an award of attorney's fees in a range between $50 to $100 million. These attorneys' fees have generated considerable discussion. Most account holders will receive an award in the range of $1500, which is less than what was expected. Over the years, the Cobell plaintiffs have frequently estimated the size of the damages in the hundreds of billions, so disappointment at the size of the award has combined with views about the size of the attorneys' fees. This is a difficult issue because we also recognize that the Cobell attorneys have worked very hard on the litigation for the last 14 years, and class action attorneys in Indian law cases should be fairly compensated on a par with similar class actions. We suggest that the numbers are not far apart, and an accommodation could be reached.

2. Require that a special master select the bank that will handle the $1.4 billion award. The settlement agreement indicates that the award will be deposited in a bank selected by the plaintiffs and approved by the court. Senator Barrasso's amendment would require that court should consider certain criteria for experience in the handling of large deposits, compliance with banking laws, and competitiveness of fees. This appears to be a reasonable provision to ensure competent and efficient management of the funds.

3. Allow tribes to participate in the land consolidation program that will occur on their reservations. NCAI strongly supports Senator Barrasso's proposal to permit tribes to participate in the land consolidation program that will be funded by the settlement. Land consolidation is critical for addressing trust management problems created by fractionation and preventing future mismanagement. However, Indian tribes have had concerns about the ability of the Bureau of Indian Affairs to administer the land consolidation program on the scale and in the timeframe required by the settlement. Since 1975,

Indian tribes have been able to contract with the BIA to manage BIA programs on their reservations. The Indian Land Consolidation Program is one of the few programs that does not allow tribal participation in this way. We believe that allowing tribal governments to participate in land consolidation will greatly benefit the program because tribes have the greatest interest in its success, and because tribes know the local conditions on their reservations much better than a centrally-located BIA.

4. Set aside a $50 million fund for class members who may not be fairly compensated by the formula distribution. The inclusion of natural resource mismanagement claims within the settlement has been controversial within Indian country because it was not a part of the original Cobell claim, and because the formula would be unfair to some landowners. Although the resource mismanagement settlement allows an opt-out, it would be extraordinarily difficult for Indian landowners to pursue mismanagement claims on their own. Senator Barrasso's amendment would set-aside $50 million out of the settlement to make equitable adjustments for certain landowners who would not be adequately compensated by the formula. So long as it does not substantially slow down the operation of the formula distribution, we believe it is reasonable to set aside a small portion of the settlement to smooth out some of the inequities of the formula system.

Thank you very much for considering our views on this important issue. We greatly appreciate the enormous efforts that all of you have put into resolving the Indian trust funds litigation.

Sincerely,

JEFFERSON KEEL,
NCAI President.

ARTHUR S. FLEMMING AWARDS 2009

Mr. KAUFMAN. Madam President, I rise today once again to recognize some of our Nation's great Federal employees.

This week, the Trachtenberg School at the George Washington University announced the winners of the annual Arthur S. Flemming Awards. These distinguished awards for public service have been bestowed upon outstanding Federal employees for the past 61 years. The Flemming Awards recognize career Federal employees, both civilian and military, who have served between 3 and 15 years in government. Nominees come from across the many departments, agencies, and service branches. Notable winners include former Senators Elizabeth Dole and Daniel Patrick Moynihan, Defense Secretary Robert Gates, former Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker, astronaut Neil Armstrong, among others.

The awards are named for Arthur S. Flemming, who had a long and exemplary career in public service which spanned from 1939 until his death in 1996. He served in a number of important roles, including Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare under President Eisenhower.

Secretary Flemming also served on the U.S. Civil Service Commission under Presidents Roosevelt and Truman, the National Advisory Committee on the Peace Corps under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, and as Chairman of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights under Presidents Nixon, Ford, Carter, and Reagan. President Clinton awarded him the Medal of Freedom in 1994.

It is fitting that these awards, which were originally bestowed by the DC Jaycees, are named for Flemming. His lifetime of dedication to public service continues to inspire so many.

The Flemming Awards are divided into three categories: applied science, engineering, and mathematics; basic science; and managerial or legal achievement. These categories highlight some of the most outstanding and exciting accomplishments by our public servants who are helping to lead the way in scientific discovery, efficient public management, and upholding justice.

This year's medals in applied science, engineering, and mathematics were won by a trio of brilliant individuals who are keeping America at the forefront of STEM research.

Dr. Lynn Antonelli is leading the way in developing laser-based sensors for the Navy. The sensors she and her team created have found commercial and medical applications, in addition to providing our Navy vessels with extended optics and sensing underwater.

Dr. Steven Brown of the National Institute of Standards and Technology—or NIST—also works with light. He and his team have made great strides in the field of light measurement that have enabled more detailed environmental imaging of the Earth. His work is revolutionizing the ability to detect minute changes in the environment as a result of climate change.

Also winning the applied science, engineering, and mathematics award is Dr. John Kitching. John has been leading the world's top research program in atomic measurement. He and his team developed ultra-miniature devices that can improve the accuracy of GPS, telecommunications, and medical imaging. They even have important national security uses, including in the more accurate detection of chemical toxins.

The three Federal employees who won this year's award for basic science are pioneers on the cutting edge of science research.

Dr. Dietrich Leibfried is one of NIST's leading experts on quantum computing. This exciting field could lead to supercomputers faster and more powerful than the best ones we have today. Dietrich Leibfried is responsible for many innovations in quantum computing, including the successful demonstration of a simple, fully programmable quantum computer, the first step in a long-term effort to build supercomputers that can handle nationally important applications, such as weather prediction, secure data encryption, and developing new drugs.

The basic science award is also going to Dr. Shyam Sharan of the National Cancer Institute at the National Institutes of Health. He has developed a simple and reliable way to analyze genetic mutations that increase a patient's chances of developing breast cancer. This will help doctors identify those who have the highest risk of cancer and treat them preventively.

Sharing the award with them is Dr. Eite Tiesinga, who works at NIST on ultra-cold atoms. By manipulating these atoms, scientists can carefully tune the quantum gases that might one day power quantum computers. Eite is frequently asked by researchers around the world to consult on their measurements and findings, and his work on ultra-cold atoms has put the United States ahead in the race to achieve successful quantum computing.

Four outstanding public employees were chosen for this year's managerial and legal achievement medal.

Angela Clowers works at the Government Accountability Office, and she led the GAO's efforts to audit transportation investments made under the Recovery Act. Her careful analysis and testimony before Congress prompted the Department of Transportation to refocus some of its investments in order to stimulate additional job growth. Angela also led the GAO's audit of government assistance to the American auto industry under TARP.

Another who won this award is Dr. Marla Dowell of NIST's laboratory in Boulder, CO. Marla leads the world's most comprehensive research program in laser metrology. She won this award for outstanding management skills and for leading a team that is developing lasers for highly accurate measurement of manufacturing equipment. This will have profound and positive effects on both defense programs and high-tech businesses.

Kana Enomoto won the award for a distinguished career working on mental health access. She served as a leader in this area in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina through her work at the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration. Kana also spearheaded efforts to improve the agency's operations, human resource management, and other critical functions as the Acting Deputy Administrator.

The fourth winner of this award is Natalie Harrop of the Air Force Global Logistics Center in Utah. Natalie distinguished herself as a lead budget analyst for the Air Force's 748th Supply Chain Management Group. She revolutionized the group's financial management, and her new system is being implemented across the 448th Supply Chain Management Wing. It is saving hundreds of work hours and over $5 million.

These 10 men and women are not an exception, they are exemplary. They represent the norm of excellence of our civil service. They have achieved great things and now join the ranks of those who share the Arthur S. Flemming Award for their great contribution to our Nation.

I hope my colleagues will join me in congratulating the winners of the 2009 Arthur S. Flemming Awards and thanking them all for their service. They are all truly great Federal employees.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BEGICH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KAUFMAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BEGICH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following amendments be debated concurrently for the total time specified in this agreement: Sanders, 4318; Vitter, 4312; Franken, 4311; that the Franken amendment be modified with the changes at the desk; with the debate time divided as follows: 20 minutes equally divided between Senators SANDERS and INHOFE; 20 minutes equally divided between Senators BAUCUS and VITTER or their designees; and 20 minutes equally divided between Senators FRANKEN and VITTER or their designees, with no intervening amendments in order; that each of the listed amendments in this agreement be subject to an affirmative 60-vote threshold; and that if the amendment, as modified where applicable, achieves that threshold, then it be agreed to and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; that if the amendment does not achieve that threshold, then it be withdrawn; that prior to each vote, there be 2 minutes of debate, equally divided and controlled, and that after the first vote, the succeeding votes be limited to 10 minutes each; that upon the use or yielding back of the total time specified above, the Senate proceed to vote in relation to the amendments in the order listed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 4311), as modified, is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

Mr. BEGICH. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, this country has a $13 trillion national debt and a record-breaking deficit, and it is time we began to address that issue.

This country has the potential now to transform our energy system away from fossil fuel, away from offshore drilling into energy efficiency and sustainable energy, and when we do that, we create millions of good-paying jobs over a period of years. That is what this amendment does.

Over the last decade, the five largest oil companies in America—ExxonMobil, Chevron, ConocoPhillips, BP, and Shell—made over $750 billion in profits. These profitable companies do not deserve to continue to have major tax breaks that in some cases not only prevent them from paying anything in taxes but enable them to get huge tax refunds from the IRS.

What the Sanders-Menendez-Whitehouse-Wyden-Lautenberg amendment would do is eliminate three major loopholes. It would bring $35 billion into our coffers over a 10-year period. It would use $25 billion of those $35 billion for deficit reduction. It would use $10 billion to fund energy conservation and sustainable energy and in the process create over 100,000 new jobs over a period of years.

It may make sense to somebody, but it does not make sense to me that we have a company such as ExxonMobil, which has been the most profitable company in the history of the world, making huge profits and last year not only paying nothing in taxes but getting a refund from the Treasury of $156 million. Let me repeat that. ExxonMobil, the most profitable corporation in the history of the world—year after year, huge profits—last year not only paid nothing in taxes but received a $156 million check from the taxpayers of this country to help them. That is absurd.

ExxonMobil is not the only company to enjoy that kind of outrageous tax treatment. Chevron received a $19 million tax refund; Valero Energy, a $157 million refund; and ConocoPhillips received over $450 million in tax breaks from the oil and gas manufacturing deduction over the past 3 years.

I am going to yield the floor in a moment because I want to refute some of what my friend from Oklahoma will be saying.

Here is what the bottom line is. The bottom line is we have a huge deficit and huge tax breaks for profitable corporations. We have the opportunity now to do what President Obama put into his 2011 budget and eliminate those tax breaks, bring $35 billion more into the Treasury—$25 billion for deficit reduction and $10 billion to create over 100,000 new jobs as we make our country more energy efficient and we move to sustainable energy.

With that, I yield the remainder of my time.

Mr. INHOFE. The Senator is yielding the remainder of is time?

Mr. SANDERS. I reserve the remainder of my time. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. INHOFE. I thank my friend from Vermont. I know my friend from Vermont would not intentionally say something that is not true. Sometimes he does not have and sometimes I do not have the actual facts, so inadvertently we might misrepresent.

Let me just say as far as Exxon is concerned that from 2004 to 2008, they paid more than $18 billion in U.S. Federal income taxes, and that is just some of the taxes they pay.

I have to say this, though. The whole discussion on this—the Sanders bill would effectively put the small and the marginal producers in America out of business. Before I go into that in any detail, let me just share this. It is interesting, when I listen to liberals talk about doing away with drilling, with oil and gas and coal and nuclear—if you do that, you cannot run this machine called America. Every time they talk about doing something to stop production, as they are doing right now in the gulf—a lot of these people are using and exploiting the tragedy in the gulf to try to retard or stop all production in America. Consequently, this is something where we would be in a position where we would be so rationed in oil and gas that we would have to be more dependent on many of these countries on which we do not want to be dependent.

We did a study. I think this would surprise the Chair. If we didn't have any political restrictions on what we could do in North America, we could completely eliminate our reliance upon the Middle East for any gas or oil within 4 years. That is pretty shocking. Our problem is not that we do not have enough oil and gas. We have more reserves than any other country. A CRS report came out with that just the other day.

What I want to do is give my honorable friend a chance to respond to my statement, and then I will reserve the remainder of my time to discuss in a little more detail how this affects the very small, marginal operators in America.

Mr. SANDERS. I will take just a few minutes now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SANDERS. I will reserve the remainder of my time. But let me say this to my friend from Oklahoma, who I know is an honest guy. We disagree. We have differences of opinion. It was not my suggestion that ExxonMobil did not pay taxes over those years. That was not my suggestion. But let me say this. He mentioned that they do pay taxes, which is true. But let's understand that ExxonMobil was the most profitable corporation in the history of the world from 2006 through 2008, making $40 billion in profits in 2006, $41 billion in 2007, and $45 billion in 2008. In the midst of a recession, my understanding is they made $19 billion in profits last year.

Would my friend from Oklahoma deny that despite making these huge profits last year, $19 billion, they received—they paid zero in 2009 and in fact received a $156 million refund from the taxpayers of this country? I hope my friend from Oklahoma would comment on whether that is good public policy.

With that, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I would say first of all, whether that is good policy—I think you have to have the accurate input before you make a policy determination. The oil and gas industry is very complicated. In order for them to go out and risk their capital, they have to plow this money back in. Frankly, most of it is plowed back into exploration.

What I wanted to get across, which I think is important, is that the Sanders amendment repeals three things—first of all, expensing for intangible drilling costs; that is IDC. It repeals percentage depletion for marginal oil and gas wells. It repeals the manufacturing deduction for oil and gas.

I predicted a long time ago, when the gulf spill took place, that people were going to try to parlay this into something to punish oil and gas. This is what they have been trying to do for a long time. It could very well be that tonight, when the President makes his big speech, he is going to talk about, now we are going to have to look at cap and trade, as if there is some relationship between what happened in the gulf and cap and trade.

Repealing expensing of intangible drilling costs eliminates the ability to expense intangible drilling and development costs, which would force at least a 25- to 30-percent reduction in drilling budgets, leading to lost jobs, lost production, and higher prices to consumers. On the floor of the Senate yesterday, I spent some time talking about how many jobs actually would be lost in the State of Louisiana. But the IDC is an expensing-out item that has been in our Tax Code since 1913. It really only applies to the smaller operators, so they are the ones who are singled out for oil and gas production.

Likewise, since 1926 small producers and millions of royalty owners have had the option to utilize percentage depletion to both simplify and account for the decline in the value of minerals from a property. As you know, they do deplete as you produce minerals.

Who is going to pay the most for this? I will share with you who pays for this, but right now I will yield the floor and reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SANDERS. Let me say to my friend from Oklahoma, who talked about the oil companies plowing their money back into new wells, that the big five oil companies spent $270 billion over the past decade buying back their own stock—about $100 billion more than they spent on oil exploration.

My friend from Oklahoma talks about jobs. That is obviously an important issue. I would concede there may be some job loss here, but it is matched by an investment in sustainable energy that will create far more employment than the relatively small number of jobs that might be lost.

I would mention Dr. Krueger, the Chief Economist at the Treasury Department. He has estimated that repealing these tax breaks would lead to a decline in employment in oil and gas production of less than one-half of 1 percent at most. That translates into the potential loss of 1,650 jobs in the oil and gas industry. I do not mean to minimize that. One job lost is one job too many. But on the other hand, in this bill we put $10 billion into the Energy Efficiency and Conservation Block Grant Program, where the estimate is we can create 140,000 jobs over the same period of time. On one hand, we might lose 1,600 jobs; on the other hand, we gain 140,000 jobs.

With that, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Let me mention one thing I want to make sure I get in here before we run out of time. We went through this class warfare once back in 1980. We had Jimmy Carter as President of the United States. He had the windfall profits tax. I am sure my friend from Vermont remembers that at that time. I remember it well. That is when they were going to have a windfall profits tax on the oil and gas industry. The results of that:

The WPT reduced domestic production between 3 and 6 percent and increased oil imports from 8 to 16 percent. . . . This made the United States more dependent upon imported oil.

That is the Congressional Research Service, which is nonpartisan.

That is a major issue here in terms of our dependence on other countries for our ability to run this machine called America.

Let's get back to the percentage depletion. The percentage depletion is particularly important for the production of America's over 600,000 low-volume marginal wells. The average marginal well produces 2 barrels a day.

Let me tell you what that is so my colleagues, when they get ready to vote, will really understand whom they are affecting. A marginal well is a well producing under 15 barrels per day. The average is 2 barrels a day. My friend is talking about all these big giants. I am not nearly as concerned about the big five and the majors as I am about my marginal operators in my State of Oklahoma. With an average of 2 barrels a day, the marginal producers actually account for 28 percent of all domestic production in the lower 48 States—28 percent. These are all small people.

If you are concerned also about whom you are affecting by this legislation, look at the royalty owners. There are literally millions of royalty owners. They have maybe a small piece of property, maybe their homestead. They are the ones who would be denied the use of their land. By putting the small ones out of business, they are the ones you are damaging.

I will reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, how much time does Senator INHOFE have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has 1½ minutes and the Senator from Vermont 3 minutes.

Mr. SANDERS. I have 3 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, what we are talking about now is beginning to address the deficit issue in a significant way, and $25 billion over a 10-year period is a good start. I think we cannot continue to have people coming down to the floor of the Senate and saying: Think about the legacy we are leaving our children and grandchildren. And then when it really comes to the point of doing something, of saying to ExxonMobil, which made $19 billion in profit last year and got a $156 million refund from the IRS, you can't have it both ways, this is a time to stand up and do the right thing. Again, it is not just ExxonMobil. It is Chevron, which received a $19 million refund from the IRS. It is Valero Energy, the 25th largest company in America with $68 billion of sales last year and received a $157 million refund check.

What we have the opportunity to do now is to, in fact, address the deficit crisis—$25 billion over a 10-year period; create over 100,000 new jobs over that period as we move into energy efficiency and sustainable energy.

With that, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Let me correct this again. I had already stated that the statement my good friend from Vermont made was a false statement, inadvertently, in terms of Exxon and what they had paid. I commented that they paid more than $18 billion in the years between 2004 and 2008. He returned and said in 2009 is when they have not paid any. They have already paid $½ billion in 2009 in U.S. Federal income tax, and they will not know the final liability until they file a return later this year. So they are still doing it. The information that my good friend has is false.

Getting back to the bill and who this affects, it doesn't affect Exxon, BP, and all these giant companies. It is the small producers that will be driven out of business. Without being able to do the deduction of the expenses on manufacturing, if this bill passes, this is going to single out the oil and gas industry, the only industry that does not enjoy the same deductions. They are punitive to this industry because right now it is quite obvious they are trying to exploit the tragedy in the gulf.

It is my understanding I have a minute and a half remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. INHOFE. I am timing it. It can't be expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator had a minute and a half when he started this segment.

Mr. INHOFE. Since my colleague has the last say, may I have 30 seconds to finish? I was going to respond to the comment about the deficit. We ought to be concerned. I am concerned about the deficit. What is interesting about this debate, I am ranked by the National Journal as the most conservative Member of the Senate. I suggest my proud liberal friend from Vermont is probably on the other end of the spectrum.

If we look at who is responsible for deficit spending, I think Members will find he would be more responsible than I would. I thank the Senator for the additional 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SANDERS. I am not a liberal but a progressive. Sometime we will talk about the difference.

Mr. President, I did not vote for the $3 trillion war in Iraq. I did not vote for the hundreds of billions of dollars in tax breaks. I did not vote for the Medicare Part D Program which drove up the deficit altogether as a matter of fact. I suspect my friend may have voted the other way on all of those issues which were not paid for.

In terms of ExxonMobil, let's be clear. I don't know what ExxonMobil told my colleague, but I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD what ExxonMobil told the Securities and Exchange Commission, the SEC. What is reported by the SEC for 2009 is they received a $156 million refund. That is the SEC.

I ask unanimous consent to have this printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. INHOFE. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SANDERS. Allow me to finish my remarks. This is where we are. Where we are right now is a moment at which we either go forward or not, be serious or not. We hear day after day concerns about the deficit. What we know is the oil industry, year after year, has been enormously profitable. We know in 2009 a number of oil companies, including ExxonMobil, did not pay any taxes. Let's do something about it. Let's pass this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. VITTER. Mr. President, I stand in strong support of my amendment No. 4312. I urge all colleagues, Democrats and Republicans, to come together to pass this commonsense amendment.

What is this amendment about? It is about something that is of great concern to me, representing the State of Louisiana. It is about the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund. It is about the ongoing crisis in the gulf. I am afraid what it is about is an example of that now famous quote of the White House Chief of Staff, Rahm Emanuel, who, around February 2009, said: We are not going to let a good crisis go to waste. He was talking about the financial crisis. I am afraid that same attitude, that same politicization of real crises is going on with the ongoing oil disaster in the gulf.

This is a real crisis, an ongoing crisis, an ongoing disaster. The flow continues. It is so significant—even subtracting out the amount of oil BP is capturing, it is so significant that it is like a whole new major oilspill each and every day. It goes on and on and on.

What is the provision in this bill in relation to that crisis? In this bill there is a dramatic increase in the tax to fund the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund from 8 cents per barrel to 41 cents, over a fivefold increase. If that were going into that liability trust fund, and if it were staying there for oil cleanup, we could come together and probably support that effort in a bipartisan way. But instead, what has happened?

As soon as all of that new revenue goes into the trust fund, $15 billion over 10 years, it is stolen. It is spent on unrelated spending. It isn't a true trust fund. It is spent on other government deficit spending. It is used essentially to hide deficit spending elsewhere. It is double counting, what I call Enron accounting. If a private company were doing this and putting this in their prospectus, putting this in their SEC reports, they would be prosecuted for criminal fraud.

My amendment is simple. It says two things: Anything that goes into the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund can only be used to clean up oilspills. Pretty basic, pretty simple. Secondly, it cannot be double counted, used as an offset for other unrelated government deficit spending. That is pretty simple. I think it is a minimum requirement we should ask in the midst of this ongoing crisis in the gulf.

Again, are we going to treat that as a real crisis and address the challenge that is there or are we going to use and abuse that crisis in Washington to advance preexisting agendas such as big government spending, additional deficit, trying to mask and hide those? I suggest the only responsible thing to do is to treat the crisis for what it is, to respect the people of the gulf and to pass this Vitter amendment that says, No. 1, money into that trust fund can only be used to clean up oilspills; and, No. 2, it cannot be double counted to mask other deficit spending.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PRYOR). The Senator from Minnesota.

AMENDMENT NO. 4311

Mr. FRANKEN. Mr. President, I rise to tell a very important story. Some of my colleagues have heard me talk previously about a woman named Tecora, a homeowner from south Minneapolis who is at risk of losing her home. Back in 2005, Tecora was looking for a mortgage and said she asked her bank for a conventional mortgage with fixed payments. Presented with a series of options, she unsurprisingly chose the cheapest one. Yet the simple option got her an exotic mortgage called an option ARM or an adjustable rate mortgage. Now her monthly payments have doubled over time and Tecora now owes $317,000 on a $288,000 loan.

During the housing bust and paying double what she was initially paying on her mortgage, Tecora started having trouble with her payments. Hoping to save her home, Tecora entered President Obama's HAMP program which is intended for people who want to avoid foreclosure.

One day, however, her mortgage servicer informed her that her file was closed because she "voluntarily left the HAMP program." Here is the problem. She didn't. She never did. Tecora never asked that her file be closed. She never tried to leave the program. Now every day she worries anew about losing her home simply because her servicer made a mistake. Tecora worked hard her whole life, but now she looks to the future in fear.

"I'm squeaking by," she told the Minneapolis Star Tribune, "by the plaque on my teeth."

As USA TODAY reported in March, these kinds of problems happen all too frequently. In an article entitled "Homes Can Be Lost by Mistake When Banks Miscommunicate"—a headline that says exactly what it sounds like: homes can be lost by mistake when banks miscommunicate—the author detailed a pattern of bank errors within HAMP that have led to people losing their homes or almost losing their homes. It should not have to be this way. That is why I have offered an amendment with Senators SNOWE and MURRAY, amendment No. 4311, to create an Office of the Homeowner Advocate for people who are struggling with problems in the HAMP program.

This amendment is currently pending to the tax extenders bill. The tax extenders bill aims to help people who are suffering during this economic crisis. It includes extensions of unemployment insurance for people who have lost their job during the recession. It promotes American jobs by continuing the small business lending program which has helped create or retain over 650,000 jobs since its creation. It includes money for the national housing trust fund which will create jobs and help ensure people have affordable places to live.

Our Office of the Homeowner Advocate would continue this effort to provide a safety net to people who are struggling economically. In particular, it would help one of the groups of people who have suffered the most during the recession—homeowners. Our Office of the Homeowner Advocate is modeled after the very successful Office of the Taxpayer Advocate at the IRS. It would ensure that homeowners participating in the HAMP program know that someone is on their side, someone with the authority to actually fix the mistakes created by mortgage servicers participating in HAMP. When homeowners call this office with concerns, the office has two important powers. First, it can make sure servicers actually obey the rules of the program or suffer the consequences. Second, it ensures that the bank would not be able to sell people's homes right away, giving the homeowner advocate time to actually solve the problem. The office is temporary, lasting only as long as HAMP does. But while it lasts, it ensures that homeowners would not be losing their homes because of simple errors.

This amendment is supported by the Treasury Department. When we first filed the amendment to the Wall Street reform bill, the White House declared it one of the top 10 amendments that would improve the Wall Street reform bill. Unfortunately, the amendment didn't receive a vote. So we are bringing it to the Senate once again to ensure that homeowners in all of our States have the protections they need.

The amendment is supported by consumer groups from around the country, ranging from Americans for Financial Reform to Consumers Union, SEIU, and the National Council of La Raza. It is also supported by the superintendent of the New York State banking system, who calls it a big step forward for homeowners.

Significantly, Congress will not have to authorize any additional appropriations for this amendment. Let me say that again: Congress will not have to authorize any additional appropriations for this amendment. The office would be funded entirely by existing HAMP administrative funds. I am going to say it again. We will be helping homeowners without authorizing any new money at all—nothing, zero, zip.

I was pleased to work with Senator VITTER, who just spoke, to make this amendment even stronger by ensuring that no homeowner can game the system and still participate in HAMP, and also by increasing the transparency of the program. These two changes are incorporated in this modification to our amendment, which also incorporates some changes suggested by Senator SHELBY to ensure that the Homeowner Advocate process does not overly delay appropriate foreclosures.

I hope my colleagues see that the Homeowner Advocate is an easy way to help homeowners in all our hometowns—in Minnesota, in Arkansas, all over this country—get the protections they need to keep their homes. Let's adopt this amendment and stand up for homeowners everywhere in this country.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I wish to speak in opposition to the Vitter amendment.

The Senator from Louisiana is essentially offering an amendment which has the effect of preventing the oilspill liability tax from going into effect. This is a head-scratching amendment. Why in the world would any Senator suggest there be no increase in the oilspill liability tax?

Right now, beginning in about—let's see, what year was it?—1990, Congress, in the wake of the Exxon Valdez oilspill, enacted an Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund and oilspill liability tax, obviously, to pay for potential or future oilspills. The tax was set at 5 cents a barrel. In the 20 years since that time, the tax has been increased just 3 cents to 8 cents a barrel. At the same time, the price of oil has increased, since 1990, from the neighborhood of $20 a barrel to $72 a barrel today. Within the last 2 years, oil has been as high as $147 a barrel.

So with the increased evidence of the damage oilspills can create, and with the increased price of oil, we thought it was an appropriate time to raise the oilspill liability tax on oil companies to help pay for future spills. That is why we are doing this. In this bill, we propose to raise that tax to 41 cents a barrel. That is a very modest increase, where today oil in the market is roughly $72 a barrel.

You hear this argument—it is not even an argument. It is like Alice in Wonderland stuff. I do not know where this stuff comes from. It is Alice in Wonderland stuff, that somehow we should not do this because it is double counting or something like that. The money that is raised from the oilspill liability tax goes to the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund. And our Federal Government has a cash flow system of accounting, so by definition we will start to lower the budget deficit. That is not double counting. That is just the way it works.

It sounds as though the Senator from Louisiana either does not want to lower the budget deficit or he does not want to increase the tax on oil companies from 8 cents a barrel, which is so small. The fact is, what he is doing is saying this: He is saying that the Budget Office, for budget purposes, cannot count the oilspill liability tax to reduce the budget deficit. So, in effect, what he is saying is, there is no oilspill liability tax. What he is saying is the taxpayers should pay for the cleanup, not the oil companies. That is basically what he is saying. He is basically saying—by putting the kibosh on the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund and the revenue coming from it—that he wants to protect the oil companies, protect the oil companies from any increase in the taxes from 8 cents a barrel up to 41 cents a barrel and, rather, have the taxpayers pay for the cleanup, not the oil companies that would pay the increase in the oilspill liability tax but the taxpayers.

I do not think that is what the vast majority of Americans wish to see. I think that is over the top and I, therefore, urge my colleagues to roundly defeat the amendment from the Senator from Louisiana who, in effect, does not want the oilspill liability tax increased and, in effect, is saying, taxpayers, pay for the cleanup, not the oil companies.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. VITTER. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 5 minutes 43 seconds—all on this amendment.

Mr. VITTER. Mr. President, it is a little difficult to know where to start, since my good friend and colleague has said so many things that are flat out wrong.

No. 1, my amendment does not prevent the tax increase. That is absolutely and perfectly clear. Let me say it again. My amendment does not block and does not prevent the tax increase.

No. 2, my amendment does do two things. It says that any money in the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund can only be used for oilspill cleanup and, secondly, that it cannot be used to offset other spending. That is exactly what is going on in this bill.

My colleague knows that the $15 billion created by this tax increase is used as an offset in this bill. It masks spending in this bill of $15 billion. If it were not for that money, the "score" of this bill would be $15 billion higher. It would go from $79 billion to $94 billion.

What I am saying is simple. We should not be grabbing, stealing that oilspill liability money to mask other spending, to double count it, to essentially steal it from the trust fund.

Again, my amendment does not prohibit the tax increase. By the way, if my colleague thinks the oil companies are paying that tax, not the consumer, I do not think he understands how the world works. But my amendment does not block that tax increase. It simply says money in the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund has to be used for oilspill cleanup, and it cannot be used as an offset, cannot be double counted for other spending, as it is clearly in this bill.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. VITTER. Mr. President, if everyone else is amenable, I am prepared to yield back—if everyone else is yielding back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I believe there is a Senator who might want to speak on this amendment. We are tracking him down right now. So I suggest we do not yield back the remainder of our time.

Mr. VITTER. Then, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VITTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. VITTER. Mr. President, I want to ensure that the quorum call does not run down my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator would like the time divided evenly?

Mr. VITTER. Yes, that would be my request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered, on this amendment.

Mr. VITTER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. VITTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all time on all amendments be yielded back. I believe that is amenable to everyone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.
The Senator from Louisiana.

NOT VOTING—4

Byrd	LeMieux
Johnson	Roberts

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 35, the nays are 61. Under the previous order, requiring 60 votes for the adoption of this amendment, the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I voted for the Sanders amendment on tax incentives for oil and natural gas production to H.R. 4213, the Tax Extenders Act.

Pennsylvania is in the midst of a historic boom in natural gas production from the Marcellus Shale formation. This industry is on track to create hundreds of thousands of jobs in the Commonwealth, and billions of dollars in revenue, both of which are badly needed in my home State. But the development of one natural resource must proceed with the utmost care for two others: water and land. I know that the natural gas industry desires to maintain the tax incentives which would be removed by the Sanders amendment. President Obama has also proposed removing these tax incentives in his fiscal year 2011 budget proposal. However, I cannot support further incentives for natural gas until that industry agrees to full public disclosure of the chemical composition of its hydraulic fracturing fluids, which are used to break apart the shale deep underground and initiate the gas flow. There is placeholder language to this effect in the discussion draft of the Kerry-Lieberman American Power Act, and I hope that natural gas companies large and small will support these provisions as the bill, or another energy bill, moves forward into law. There are many issues that the natural gas industry must cooperate with the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania on, including hydraulic fracturing disclosure, wastewater recycling, responsible well development, and a severance tax. My support for incentives for natural gas will remain contingent on that industry demonstrating its commitment to developing the Marcellus Shale in a manner that all Pennsylvanians will look back on, generations from now, with pride.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Madam President, I opposed the amendment of my friend from Vermont. Although I understand his frustration and his intentions, I could not agree with the effects of the amendment. Over the years, as chairman and ranking member of the Finance Committee, I have supported policy reforms in taxation of oil and gas income. Many times, the major oil firms have registered their objections. Also, in the area of corporate taxation, I pushed hard to curtail a practice that oil firms used to erode the U.S. tax base. That practice, known as corporate inversions, was curtailed in the 2004 FSC-ETI legislation.

I re-doubled my efforts to make the reform applicable to four oil service firms but was rebuffed by the House of Representatives' leadership in the years 2004–2007.

Chairman BAUCUS and I have been careful to not impair tax incentives for independent, smaller producer oil and gas production. We have differentiated the availability of these incentives for smaller producers and made clear that major oil and gas producers did not receive many of these incentives.

The amendment of my friend from Vermont blurs that line and would adversely affect domestic production. We need to ensure an adequate supply of domestic oil and gas to keep the price at the pump down. Together with incentives for alternative fuels, line ethanol and biodiesel, and conservation, these small producer incentives with hopefully reduce our reliance on imported oil. Chairman BAUCUS joins me in this view.

For these reasons, I opposed the amendment of my friend from Vermont.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, section 302(a) of S. Con. Res. 13, the 2010 budget resolution, permits the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee to adjust the allocations of a committee or committees, aggregates, and other appropriate levels and limits in the resolution for legislation that invests in clean energy and preserves the environment, including legislation that encourages conservation and efficiency. This adjustment to S. Con. Res. 13 is contingent on the legislation not increasing the deficit over either the period of the total of fiscal years 2009 through 2014 or the period of the total of fiscal years 2009 through 2019.

I find that Senate amendment No. 4318, an amendment offered by Senator SANDERS to Senate amendment No. 4301, an amendment in the nature of a substitute to H.R. 4213, fulfills the conditions of the deficit-neutral reserve fund to invest in clean energy and preserve the environment. Therefore, pursuant to section 302(a), I am adjusting the aggregates in the 2010 budget resolution, as well as the allocation to the Senate Finance Committee.

I ask unanimous consent that the following revisions to S. Con. Res. 13 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 4312

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 2 minutes of debate, evenly divided, prior to a vote in relation to the Vitter amendment No. 4312. Who yields time?

The Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I don't see the proponent of the amendment on the Senate floor.

There he comes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. VITTER. Madam President, I urge support for the Vitter amendment. It does two very simple things: It says any money coming into the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund can only be used to clean up oilspills. It also says the money cannot be used as an offset for unrelated spending, as it is in this bill. It cannot be used to mask other deficit spending or as an offset for unrelated spending.

The amendment specifically does not negate or block the tax increase of funds into the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund.

I reserve the reminder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, this amendment is sheer sophistry. The effect of his amendment will say that not oil companies but the taxpayers will pay for cleanups.

The effect of this amendment would mean no increase in oilspill liability tax from 8 cents a barrel today up to 41 cents. If there is no increase in the spill liability tax, oil companies aren't going to pay for future cleanups, the taxpayers will. He has this—I said “sophistry.” So it is a sophistry kind of argument. It is fog and double counting and bead counting. That is not what is going on here.

The bottom line is this amendment has the effect of taxpayers paying for the cleanup, not the oil companies. This will effectively repeal the increase up to 41 cents per barrel. I urge Senators to not support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. VITTER. Madam President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 21 seconds remaining.

Mr. VITTER. My good friend and colleague's argument is not sophistry, it is just statements that are not true. This amendment does not block the tax increase, period. It does not. It simply says the money has to be used to clean up oil spills, and it cannot be used as an offset for other spending. Please support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired on the amendment.

Mr. VITTER. Madam President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

VOTE EXPLANATION

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I voted against the Vitter amendment on the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund to H.R. 4213, the Tax Extenders Act, because no matter what the size of the trust fund, the party responsible for an oil spill must pay all costs of its cleanup, and is also responsible for economic damages caused by the spill. This amendment will not reduce in any way the available resources for combating the spill in the gulf, or any other future spill. The moneys in the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund may be used to advance cleanup costs but that does not relieve British Petroleum as the primarily liable party for paying the full costs of the gulf spill cleanup which will reimburse the trust fund for any funds expended.

AMENDMENT NO. 4311

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There will now be 2 minutes evenly divided prior to a vote in relation to the Franken amendment No. 4311.

Who yields time?

The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. FRANKEN. Madam President, let me tell you about this amendment. It comes from me and Senator SNOWE, and it would create the Office of the Homeowner Advocate within HAMP. It is needed because people don't really have an advocate within HAMP. They get their questions answered from servicers who often make mistakes, and people have been losing their homes simply because of mistakes.

The White House called this one of the 10 best amendments for the Wall Street reform bill. It didn't get a vote then. It costs nothing. No new money. It costs absolutely nothing. Senator VITTER weighed in and made it better by having me put in something about people who can afford their mortgage can't participate in HAMP, and it removes language that would delay foreclosures.

I urge all my colleagues to vote—that was telling me I was out of time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Order in the Chamber.

Mr. FRANKEN. Oh, it was order in the Chamber.

In that case, I will also say that it will make data public. Also, Senator VITTER and Senator SHELBY weighed in on this and made it better. So it is safe for Members on both sides of the aisle to vote for this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. FRANKEN. Thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time in opposition.

Mr. SHELBY. I yield back time, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

NOMINATION OF ELENA KAGAN

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I wish to address my colleagues about the upcoming judiciary hearing and the nomination of Solicitor Kagan to the Supreme Court. I have always been of the opinion that the Senate needs to conduct a comprehensive and careful review of Supreme Court nominees. It is important that the nominee be given a fair, respectful, and also deliberative process. This is a lifetime appointment to the highest Court in the land, so it is our duty to ensure that the Supreme Court of the United States candidate understands the proper role of the Supreme Court in our system of government, and would be true to the Constitution and the laws as written. We need to be certain that the nominee will not come with an agenda to impose his or her personal political feelings and preferences on the bench.

The Senate needs enough time to adequately review the nominee's record to make these determinations. But because Solicitor Kagan does not have the usual background of being a judge on the Federal or State bench, we have no concrete examples of her judicial philosophy in action. It is critical that we understand whether she has a proper judicial philosophy because Solicitor Kagan is being considered for the Supreme Court. So it is even more important for us to look at her entire record and to give particular weight to her statements and writings as well as the positions she has taken over the years.

In order for the Senate to fulfill its constitutional responsibility of advise and consent, we must get all of her documents from the Clinton Library and have enough time to analyze them so we can determine whether she should be a Justice. I share the concerns of the Judiciary Committee ranking member, Senator SESSIONS, that Solicitor Kagan's documents will not be fully produced in time for the committee to conduct a thorough review of the nominee's record.

I hope we will receive these materials in time before the Judiciary Committee holds the Kagan hearings. From the materials and documents that we received so far, and which the committee is still reviewing, Solicitor Kagan's record clearly shows she is a political lawyer. In fact, a recent Washington Post article said her papers in the Clinton Library "show a flair for the political," and that she had "finely tuned . . . political antennae."

Solicitor Kagan was involved in a number of hot-button issues during President Clinton's second term, including gun rights, welfare reform, partial-birth abortion, and Whitewater. The documents we received from the Clinton Library show that Ms. Kagan promoted liberal positions and offered analyses and recommendations that often were more political than legal in nature.

Solicitor Kagan's memos from the Marshall papers also indicate a liberal and seemingly outcome-based approach to her legal analysis. So I look forward to asking Solicitor Kagan about her record and her judicial philosophy. But a judge needs to be an independent arbiter, not an advocate or a rubberstamp for a political agenda. We already know that Solicitor Kagan has held far left political views from a young age. She has been a long-time political lawyer, and she is a personal friend of the President.

As Solicitor General, she has been a prominent member of the Obama administration's team. As a nominee to the Supreme Court, Solicitor Kagan has the burden of showing that despite her record as a political lawyer, rather than as a sitting judge or practitioner, if she is confirmed she will apply the law impartially and not as a member of someone's team who is working to achieve their preferred political result.

Moreover, President Obama's standard for picking judicial nominees is one that places a premium on a judge's empathy for certain individuals or groups rather than on an even-handed reading of the law. As a Senator, President Obama lauded judicial nominees who would decide cases based on "one's deepest values, one's core concerns, one's broader perspectives on how the world works, and the depth and breadth of one's empathy."

As a Presidential candidate, President Obama said he would appoint judges who have empathy for certain groups. As President he said his judges would have "a keen understanding of how the law affects the daily lives of the American people."

The Obama "empathy" standard concerns me greatly because the inference is that an empathetic judge will pick winners and losers based on his or her personal preferences rather than the law blindly picking winners and losers.

When President Obama nominated Solicitor Kagan to the Supreme Court, Vice President BIDEN's chief of staff, who was involved in vetting the Supreme Court of the United States candidates, assured liberals they had nothing to worry about from her selection. In fact, he said Solicitor Kagan was "clearly a legal progressive." Thus, it is safe to assume that the President was true to his promise and picked someone who embodied his empathy standard.

Because Solicitor Kagan does not have one of the best indicators of a Supreme Court nominee's judicial philosophy; that is, a judicial record on a State or Federal bench, then I believe she should be very forthcoming with the Judiciary Committee's inquiries into her judicial philosophy.

In fact, Ms. Kagan herself advocated that a nominee should respond to specific inquiries into the nominee's judicial philosophy and positions on constitutional issues.

Solicitor Kagan wrote in her University of Chicago Law Review article, "Confirmation Messes, Old and New:"

The kind of inquiry that would contribute most to understanding and evaluating a nomination is . . . discussion first, of the nominee's broad judicial philosophy and, second, of her views on particular constitutional issues. By "judicial philosophy" . . . I mean such things as the judge's understanding of the role of courts in our society, of the nature of and values embodied in our Constitution, and of the proper tools and techniques of interpretation, both constitutional and statutory.

She also wrote that a nominee could comment on "hypothetical cases" and on general issues such as "affirmative action or abortion," or "privacy rights, free speech, race and gender discrimination, and so forth."

Given the fact that Solicitor Kagan has been nominated to a lifetime position on the Nation's highest Court, the Senate must determine that if confirmed, she will interpret the Constitution with judicial restraint and without imposing her personal political policy preferences and biases.

The Senate must determine by examining the totality of her record that if confirmed, she would not be a rubberstamp for the President's political agenda. We will have to see whether Ms. Kagan will live up to her own standard for Supreme Court nominees and whether she will be as forthcoming as she argued Supreme Court of the United States nominees should be in the Senate confirmation process.

So I am going to be pursuing this for my people of Iowa because they are very concerned. I am getting a lot of phone calls both for and against her that have to be taken into consideration.

I yield the floor.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant editor of the Daily Digest proceeded to call the roll.

INTERCHANGE FEES

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, a few weeks ago we considered a Wall Street reform bill which tried to address some of the underlying problems in our economy which led to the recession. It was an ambitious undertaking. The Senate Banking Committee, under Chairman DODD, led us through a very difficult and lengthy debate over the bill.

Part of the debate included an amendment which I offered relative to what is known as an interchange fee. An interchange fee is the amount of money charged to a business when a customer presents a credit card. So if I go to a restaurant in Chicago and pay for the bill with a credit card, the restaurant is going to have to pay a percentage of my bill to the credit card company or at least to the issuing bank of the credit card. And then I, of course, have to pay the bill when it comes in the mail.

This so-called interchange fee—the charge by the credit card company to the business I am patronizing—is a fee that turns out to be very large and expensive. Nearly $50 billion in credit and debit card interchange fees is collected each year, primarily by the largest credit card companies and by the largest banks that issue those credit cards. This is virtually unregulated. There is no regulation as to the amount charged or collected from these businesses. Visa and MasterCard, which dominate the credit and debit card industries, establish the interchange rates that all merchants and, by extension, their customers pay to banks whenever a card is swiped. So if the restaurant I went to is charged 1 percent, 2 percent, or 3 percent because I presented a Visa card or a MasterCard, that is going to be reflected in the bill I pay. It certainly is going to come off of any profit margin the restaurant might realize as a result of my patronizing it.

Already more than half of the retail transactions in America are conducted by debit and credit cards. Every time someone uses a credit or debit card to make a donation to a charity, Visa and MasterCard require an interchange fee to be paid. There have been exceptions where they have said they will suspend the fees, but by and large, if one makes a donation to the charity of their choice using their credit or debit card, part of the money they think they donated is going to end up in the hands of these credit card companies.

According to a January 14 analysis by the Huffington Post, banks and card companies make an estimated $250 million a year from their interchange or swipe fees on charitable donations. In other words, it turns out that Visa and MasterCard are declaring themselves part of this charitable contribution and taking millions of dollars out of it. I would like to see more of that money go to the charitable purposes for which people donate their money.

The Huffington Post noted that charities such as Habitat for Humanity pay about 2.15 percent of their donation in card fees. St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital, well known and well respected, pays about 2.5 percent in card fees. Is it really necessary for Visa and MasterCard and the big banks to take a cut out of every charitable donation? We are not talking about the cost of the transaction. I will concede the fact that the regular proportional cost of a transaction of using the card is certainly fair for Visa and MasterCard to charge, but they raise that dramatically. There is no way that Visa and MasterCard could justify 2.5 percent if I use my debit card to try to make a donation to St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital. They are literally gaming the system and profit-taking from charities.

In the wake of the devastating earthquake in Haiti in January, Visa, MasterCard, and their member banks voluntarily suspended the collection of interchange fees for some charitable donations for earthquake relief. It seems these companies can survive without charging these fees for charitable donations. They have done it. One bank, Capital One, has decided not to collect interchange on donations made to charity by their cards. I salute them. It is the right thing to do. Why aren't they all taking this position? Why don't they exempt charitable institutions from these issuing bank and credit card fees? I wish other banks were as reasonable when it came to interchange fees and charitable causes as Capital One.

There is another group—universities. They pay a heavy cost in interchange fees. They lose a fortune in interchange when people use cards to pay for things such as tuition and housing.

After my amendment passed the Senate, I received a letter from the American Council on Education and eight other major university associations thanking me. The letter said:

As a result of your amendment, we believe that colleges and universities will see reduced debit card costs which they will be able to pass on to students and their families through lower costs as well as increased resources for institutional grant aid and student services.

The reach of credit cards is unlimited in our economy. So are the greedy hands of the credit card companies and their issuing banks when it comes to these interchange fees. When I said in this amendment that we really want those fees to reflect the reasonable and proportional cost of processing the transaction, they screamed bloody murder because there is a lot of money being made—some $50 billion across the economy from these fees. Wouldn't it be great if we could enable colleges and universities to lower the cost students have to pay and put more resources into financial aid?

The letter also said that under my amendment, "colleges and universities will be able to offer discounts to students and their families for payments made with checks and debit cards." That is another thing they don't like to talk about. These two major credit card giants, Visa and MasterCard, really have a sweet deal. They basically coordinate their policies. It is as if Coke and Pepsi reached an agreement and said to your local store: Don't you dare offer that other product at a discount. That is virtually what has happened with Visa and MasterCard. They tell the stores: You can't give any better treatment; you can't say this is a Visa store or a MasterCard store. No way. You have to say we accept all credit cards from these issuing agencies. And basically, you can't limit it to debit cards, limit it to check cards, give a discount, limit the amount in terms of the dollar amount you can charge on these cards.

I also want to say that governments are paying these credit card companies a lot as well. Think of all the ways in which people conduct transactions with Federal, State, and local governments. Every time somebody uses a card to pay for a driver's license or a parking sticker or a ride on public transit or to pay a ticket or to obtain a permit, there is an interchange fee. The city of Chicago paid $7.5 million in interchange fees last year. The Chicago Transit Authority paid $1.8 million per year in interchange fees. The Illinois Tollway paid $11.6 million in interchange fees last year. In most cases, the government agencies have no bargaining power when it comes to the amount of the interchange fee. Every dollar spent on these fees is a dollar that could have been spent on jobs and services and a dollar that could have been spared from the taxpayer.

The American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators represents DMVs across the country. They accept cards for payment of things such as driver's licenses, car registrations, and license plates. They wrote a letter. They said:

State motor vehicle agencies and other state agencies are experiencing unprecedented financial strain today, as we seek to control costs where possible. . . . While our customers certainly appreciate the convenience of electronic transactions, few understand that the costs of accepting credit and debit card payments for motor vehicle agencies are higher today than ever before, and that these fees compound the current budget crisis that many states face.

The cost of interchange fees affects every local government, every State, every Indian tribe, and even the Federal Government. Right now, even the Federal Government is as helpless as any small business when it comes to trying to reduce their interchange costs.

The amendment which I offered, which was adopted on the floor of the Senate by a vote of 64 to 33, requires debit interchange fees to be kept at a reasonable level, and it allows sellers to offer discounts to consumers without threat of punishment from Visa and MasterCard. The amendment was adopted in a broadly bipartisan vote, as 17 of my Republican colleagues joined me in passing it. The amendment is going to help American families, each of whom pays an estimated $427 a year to subsidize the credit card companies and the banks issuing these cards.

Lobbyists for the financial industry have thrown the kitchen sink at my amendment in an effort to keep the $50 billion interchange fee system completely unregulated. Imagine, here is DURBIN's amendment getting into $50 billion worth of profit-taking these credit card companies and their banks, the biggest banks, are engaged in.

Incredibly, the card companies and banks have even argued that they need to preserve the $50 billion interchange system in order to protect consumers. Give me a break. On the issue of consumers, they have no shame. Do my colleagues recall that we passed a credit card reform bill and the credit card companies said: We will need 6 months to really get all this stuff together, all these changes. Give us a little time.

Remember what happened in that 6-month period? Every time you would go to pick up the mail and there was something from the credit card company, you would open it and they would announce they were raising interest rates. So they ran the rates up as high as they could before the Credit Card Reform Act went into effect.

When have Visa and MasterCard and the big banks ever stood up for consumers? Didn't we just see them fall all over themselves to gouge cardholders before this last credit card act went into effect? Where do the banks and card companies think their $50 billion in interchange fees comes from? It comes from consumers who subsidize the interchange system by paying higher retail prices. It is a massive hidden transfer of wealth from consumers to big banks.

The amendment represents one of the big wins for small businesses and consumers in years. It will help small businesses grow and create jobs.

Don't let the Wall Street lobbyists fool you. They will say anything to protect their big bank profits.

I have received some letters from Illinois small businesses supporting my interchange reform. From James Phillip, Jr., owner of Phillip's Flower Shops in Westmont, IL:

As an 87-year old family business, over one-third of our customer purchases are paid by credit and debit cards; yet we found that over the years our cost of clearing credit cards and complying with their rules has increased faster than the total amount cleared—to the point that it is now extremely burdensome on the independent retailer. . . . I am writing to voice my support for legislation that would make credit card fees and rules for merchants more reasonable and competitive.

Mr. President, whether it is Colorado or Illinois, if we are coming out of this recession, it will be because small businesses are on the move, expanding their employment, expanding their efforts, expanding their businesses. This is a drag on small business.

From Robert Jones, president of the American Sale patio store in Tinley Park, IL:

I am a small businessman in Illinois. I want to thank and encourage you to push for credit card and debit card interchange reform. Being a small business we have absolutely no choice and no power to negotiate with the big credit card companies over their fees. They basically tell us “take it or leave it.” Since the vast majority of our customers now pay with credit cards due to all the points and perks they are getting for doing so, we have no alternative. They essentially have a monopoly on taking payments from our customers. I applaud your amendment to level this playing field.

From George LeDonne, owner of LeDonne Hardware in Berkeley, IL:

As the owner of a hardware store in Berkeley, IL, I am directly affected by these fees. Small businesses are closing every day as it becomes more of a struggle to stay profitable. Your help in recognizing and acting on this is appreciated.

Russ Peters, owner of Mobile Print, Inc., a printing company in Mount Prospect, IL:

I wish you to know I definitely support this reform. Credit cards are ubiquitous in today's marketplace and these common sense reforms will benefit a small business like mine.

Jim Dames, he owns the Snackers Cafe in Western Springs:

Please help small businesses, I can't fight the credit card companies alone.

And here is an old friend of mine, George Preckwinkle, president of Bishop Hardware and Supply. He has 10 locations in central Illinois. I have known George for 40 years. He wrote me a letter. And George is not of the same political faith that I am, so I accept this as being a genuine statement, not partial in any way. George writes:

It is very important to business, especially smaller business, to solve the problems retailers are having with exorbitant fees and contractual restrictions imposed by Visa and MasterCard. Senator DURBIN's amendment would be a huge help.

I cannot tell you how great it is to hear from my friend George, who probably has never voted for me but just sent me the nicest note about this effort.

I could go on with a long list, but I will not. But I will just tell you this: The information we are receiving is very clear. Whether the business is small or large, whether it is a private entity or a public entity, such as the city of Chicago, the city of Springfield, IL, whether we are talking about universities that are trying to keep their costs down for students, whether we are talking about charities that literally are trying to raise enough money to do the good things that need to be done in our country and in our world, the credit card companies are always there with their hand out and their demands for these fees. For years, there has been virtually no competition. These small businesses do not have a fighting chance against these credit card companies.

Well, I can tell you, I have roused a sleeping giant, if it was ever asleep, in the giant credit card companies in what they are trying to do on Capitol Hill. They are smothering this place with lobbyists who are calling, and they realize they have almost no credibility whatsoever, so they are finding surrogates.

The latest group, which really saddens me, is the credit unions. Historically, I have always voted with the credit unions. I have thought they virtually represent the right way to loan money, and they get special treatment because of that approach. Their idea, of course, is they collect the money from their members in their savings, and they loan it out so that their members can buy cars and other things that are necessary. They keep their costs low because they are nonprofit. We do not tax them, so we give them special treatment. But they also issue credit cards, so we exempted them from my amendment. Virtually every credit union in America, but for three, is exempt. We put a $10 billion threshold for any financial institution that would be affected by it. That eliminates almost 8,000 credit unions. Only three would be covered. They are huge. Yet the credit unions are roaming all over Capitol Hill saying the Durbin amendment is the end of the world.

Here is their logic: If we end up reducing the interchange fee on debit cards in the biggest banks, then Visa and MasterCard have said to the smaller banks and credit unions: We are going to reduce your interchange fee too. And they say they have to do that because they just cannot separate all these different banks and credit cards. Well, that is just a bunch of baloney, if I can say that on the floor of the Senate—and I just did—because Visa has 122 different categories of interchange fees today; MasterCard, over 100. So the argument that they cannot separate the little banks from the big banks—get out of here.

Secondly, they have the power today to lower interchange fees unilaterally. They can just call and say to these credit unions and community banks: We are going to lower the interchange fee that is being paid to you. They can do it, and these banks have no recourse whatsoever. If the banks and credit unions think that is an unfair proposition, then they are standing in the shoes of small business—in exactly the same position.

These Visa and MasterCard credit card companies have reached the point where they have so much power and virtually no competition, that it was confirmed last week in a hearing of the Senate Judiciary Committee that they are currently being investigated by the Antitrust Division at the U.S. Department of Justice. No details were provided in terms of this investigation, but the person who spoke for the Department of Justice confirmed that fact. They have reached the point where they virtually have no competition. They can impose whatever they want.

Let me make one last point about that. If Visa and MasterCard make their money because more people own credit cards and more banks issue credit cards, does it make sense that they would create an environment where credit unions and smaller banks would not want to issue credit cards? Of course not. The profitability of Visa and MasterCard is when more people are using credit cards, more banks are issuing credit cards. So if they are going to make it more difficult for banks and credit unions to issue credit cards, they are really cutting off their nose to spite their face, and I think that is pretty obvious.

But it is interesting to me how fearful credit unions are of Visa and MasterCard. They are literally shivering in their boots. They do not understand that they are the victims as much as the small businesses are of these powerful credit card companies. I wish for once they would step back and take a look and not just automatically sign up whenever the largest banks in America say jump. It just should not be that the commercial banks, the community banks, the credit unions are doing this, and it really is a vast departure from where they have been historically.

So at this point, the bill is now in conference committee, and I know Senator DODD and Chairman BARNEY FRANK of the House Banking Committee are working hard to try to enact this bill. I know the strong bipartisan vote in the Senate is an indication of how we feel about it. I hope our friends in the House, though they do not have that provision in their bill, will consider making this part of the conference committee report.

It will be a positive day for us in America when the message is finally delivered to the credit card companies that they can no longer have this dictatorial grip over small businesses and the issuing banks they have today.

I hope we can see, in the next 2 weeks, a bill coming forward on Wall Street reform with many important provisions. This is one that is certainly important to me personally and I think will be a way for us to help small businesses increase jobs and help this economy come out of this recession. I hope we can do that soon.

Mr. President, I see another colleague on the floor, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. First of all, Mr. President, let me thank the distinguished assistant majority leader for his continuing work on this issue. It protects small businesses and consumers from gouging by the credit card companies and the monolithic monopoly power they bring to bear. I was pleased to vote for and support this amendment on the floor, and I wish the assistant majority leader much success in the conference committee to get that in the final bill.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about the Foreign Manufacturers Legal Accountability Act, which I have filed as amendment No. 4324 to the package currently under consideration by the Senate. This amendment would close a loophole in Federal law that allows foreign manufacturers to evade accountability when their products injure Americans here at home. It would do so by requiring foreign manufacturers to meet the same standards as domestic manufacturers. It is a simple reform. It is much needed. It will protect American industry against unfair competition or having to, in effect, subsidize dangerous foreign products. It will foster American jobs for that reason. It will keep American consumers safe, and it will help Americans who are injured make sure they get an adequate recovery for their injuries from the foreign manufacturer who caused them the harm.

What happens here in America when a foreign manufacturer is able to avoid responsibility for a defective product that causes an injury to an American? When they are able to avoid responsibility, one of two bad things happen. One or the other has to be. One is that the injured American gets no recovery. Their injury goes unredressed. They cannot find the accountable company, and they just have to suffer without compensation. The second alternative is that an American company, under the theory of joint and several liability, has to make good for the harm caused by the foreign company. It becomes a cost to the American company.

This actually came up in the hearing on the bill when an Alabama contractor explained how he had to make good on the claims of homeowners whose homes he built when, without knowing it, he had used defective Chinese wallboard in the homes and they emitted sulfur that was bad for the health of the home occupants, that corroded piping, and that caused an immense amount of work that had to be redone to have his customers be satisfied customers. It became his problem when the Chinese wallboard company was nowhere to be found when their defective product caused all this harm down in Alabama. These are things that should not happen, and they are bipartisan concerns.

I want to say I am proud and grateful to have had the opportunity to work with Senator SESSIONS and Senator DURBIN to achieve these goals. Both Senator SESSIONS and Senator DURBIN were original cosponsors when I first introduced this bill on a stand-alone basis. Thirteen other bipartisan cosponsors have since signed on to that bill, and I am very grateful for all their support.

Let me describe for a few minutes the specifics of this particular amendment.

There are two legal hurdles that currently face an American harmed by one of these foreign manufacturers. As my lawyer colleagues know, someone who gets injured and brings a lawsuit must bring the responsible party into the proper court. This requires the injured party, one, to serve process on the defendant, to file the papers in the lawsuit with the defendant, and two, to establish personal jurisdiction over the defendant, consistent with the due process clause of the Constitution. No service of process, no jurisdiction, no lawsuit, no recovery, no assistance for the injured American.

The problem is that service of process on a foreign manufacturer is often extremely costly and extremely slow because it often must be done abroad rather than here in the United States. For instance, when an American seeks to serve a defendant in a country that is a signatory to what is called the Hague Convention on the Service Abroad of Judicial and Extra Judicial Documents in Civil and Commercial Matters, the complaint must be translated into the foreign language, transmitted to the central authority in the foreign country, and then delivered according to the rules of service in the home country of the defendant, which may not be hospitable to foreign litigants. Even more complex procedural hurdles face an American seeking to serve a defendant in a country that has not signed the Hague Convention.

But let's say you get through all that expense and all that hassle and all that delay. Even when an American does serve process successfully on a foreign manufacturer, personal jurisdiction then can prove an insurmountable hurdle. This is because Supreme Court decisions interpreting the due process clause make it hard to exercise jurisdiction over foreign companies, even those whose products have injured Americans.

So something clearly needs to be done to bring the way we treat foreign manufacturers into line with the liability and responsibility of domestic manufacturers. They should not have this advantage over our domestic industry.

This amendment provides a simple solution to both of these problems. It requires a foreign manufacturer that wants to import products into the United States for our consumers to use to register an agent in the United States who will accept service of process for cases in the United States. By designating such an agent, the manufacturer would consent to the personal jurisdiction of the courts in the State where the agent is located, and no further complicated service of process would be required. This is not dissimilar, for example, to the way a corporation from outside my home State of Rhode Island must register to transact business in our State—a requirement that exists in many States around the country. I suspect it exists in the distinguished Presiding Officer's home State of Colorado.

Finally, let me make clear to whom this applies and how. The big foreign manufacturers that ship billions of dollars of products into the United States and whose names we would all instantly recognize already can be held accountable somewhere in the United States by virtue of their having American operations or by virtue of the size of their imports. They can usually be found. And for companies such as that, complying with the new law will be as simple as designating someone in their U.S. headquarters to be that agent for service process. It will be a 5-minute task to comply with this law.

For foreign companies that have set up manufacturing operations somewhere in the United States, they will get the same treatment as domestic companies under this bill. Their domestic operation will be a location where they can be served. It is the foreign manufacturers that take advantage of our marketplace, but when their defective product injures someone and can't be found, that are the real targets of this amendment, they don't want to be held responsible anywhere.

Who are they? Well, to give a few examples, they are the ones who make the drywall I talked about, full of sulfur, that corrodes wiring and makes the residents sick. They are the companies that make cheap toys with lead paint on them that is poisonous to children or metal plumbing fittings that rupture under routine use because they are so shoddy or those that contaminate medical supplies that are sold into the United States with unthinkable chemicals. These companies may look perfectly legitimate when they sell their products, but when you try to find them once you have been injured by them, it is like grasping smoke. They disappear, and they avoid all accountability when their products hurt our fellow Americans.

It is these companies that this amendment will fully bring within the scope of the American legal system. It is important that we do this, because they should play by the same rules our American companies do with respect to service of process and availability for redress.

The Foreign Manufacturers Legal Accountability Act applies to major product categories including consumer goods, drugs, cosmetics, and chemicals through the Federal agencies that already regulate those product categories and through the components of the Department of Homeland Security that oversee our Nation's imports. The amendment empowers those agencies to use their expertise in these fields to set appropriate thresholds; for instance, to exempt small foreign manufacturers from having to register an agent, and allows a working period to ensure that no disruptions in imports occur during the implementation period of this amendment.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment. I think it is important. By leveling the economic playing field, it will allow American manufacturers to compete fairly with foreign manufacturers, thereby protecting American jobs. By holding foreign manufacturers to the same standards as American manufacturers, it will protect our consumers and American businesses without raising any trade issues. It will eliminate this terrible situation of a foreign product causing an injury to an American for which that American can get no relief or a foreign company causing an injury to an American but because they can't be found, having an American company that worked on the installation of the product, that sold the product, that is for some reason jointly and severally liable for that injury having to carry the cost that belongs on the foreign manufacturer and would be their cost if only they could be found and served and brought to account in an American court. Both of those things are rankly unfair, and this is the best solution to put an end to those two injustices.

I think it is an important and a much needed fix to a quirk in our laws. We should pass it as soon as possible. I hope very much it can become a part of the legislation to which it is now a pending amendment.

I thank you very much.

I yield the floor, and I note the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday,

June 16, following morning business, the Senate resume consideration of the House message with respect to H.R. 4213; that there then be 5 minutes of debate equally divided and controlled between Senators BAUCUS and GRASSLEY or their designees; that upon the use or yielding back of that time, Senator MCCONNELL or his designee be recognized to make a Budget Act point of order against the Baucus motion; that once the point of order is raised, Senator BAUCUS then be recognized to waive the applicable budget point of order; that if the waiver fails, then the Baucus motion to concur with an amendment be withdrawn, and Senator BAUCUS then be recognized to move to concur in the House amendment to the Senate amendment to the bill with an amendment; provided notwithstanding the withdrawal of the previous motion, the previously agreed-upon amendments Nos. 4302, as modified, 4326, and 4311, as modified, be incorporated into the new Baucus motion to concur; that the Reid amendment No. 4344 be reoffered with the same text; that on Thursday, June 17, beginning at 10 a.m., the Senate debate the Thune substitute amendment No. 4333, to be reoffered with the same text; that the amendment be debated for 2 hours, with the time equally divided and controlled between Senators BAUCUS and THUNE or their designees; that upon the use or yielding back of time, Senator BAUCUS be recognized to raise a budget point of order against the Thune amendment; that Senator THUNE, or his designee, then be recognized to move the applicable budget point of order; that if the waiver fails, then the Thune substitute amendment be withdrawn; further, that if the waivers for either Baucus or Thune amendments succeed, the amendments remain pending; finally, that the cloture motion be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, pursuant to section 302(a) of S. Con. Res. 13, the 2010 budget resolution, I made adjustments to the 2010 budget resolution earlier today for Senate amendment No. 4318, an amendment offered by Senator SANDERS to S.A. 4301, an amendment in the nature of a substitute to H.R. 4213.

The Senate did not adopt Senate amendment No. 4318. Consequently, I am further revising the 2010 budget resolution to reverse the adjustments previously made pursuant to section 302(a) to the aggregates and to the allocation provided to the Senate Finance Committee.

I ask unanimous consent that the following revisions to S. Con. Res. 13 be printed in the RECORD.

RECOGNIZING HELP OF SOUTHERN NEVADA

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I rise today to celebrate the 40 year anniversary of HELP of Southern Nevada, a nonprofit organization providing Nevadans with housing, emergency services, life skills and prevention—the four cornerstones for which its name is an acronym. HELP has served as a vital resource to hundreds of thousands of Nevadans, and continues to provide unwavering support to our communities.

HELP was first created out of the Junior League of Las Vegas in 1969, and called the Voluntary Action Center. They incorporated a year later, in 1970, and became one of Nevada's premier resource centers for the disadvantaged. In that year, HELP provided its services to 300 people in southern Nevada. Today, they serve 55,000 distinct clients every year.

The services HELP offers range from financial assistance with rent and transportation costs, to providing meals to families during the holidays. A focus on providing practical assistance in gaining self-sufficiency makes HELP one of southern Nevada's greatest social service providers. Its services include seven different areas of support: Community Alternative Sentencing, Holiday Programs, Nevada 2-1-1, Social Services, Weatherization, Work Opportunities Readiness Center—W.O.R.C., and the Youth Center.

To highlight a few of the great contributions of HELP of Southern Nevada, let me tell you about the Community Alternative Sentencing programs and the Youth Center. The Community Alternative Sentencing Program offers hope to individuals facing incarceration and other sanctions. In lieu of these penalties, individuals give their times and services to aiding nonprofits in community service. In addition to the productive and illuminating experience this program offers its participants, it saves taxpayers the cost of incarceration, and directly increases the capacity of nonprofits to help in the community. The HELP of southern Nevada Youth Center provides training and assistance to Southern Nevada's youth to prevent homelessness and equip young people for success. Many are matched with volunteer mentors from the community, who work help them get the most out of classes they take at the center which help them develop work and personal skills. These programs only scratch the surface of HELP's vast offerings.

It brings me great joy to see Nevadans working so hard to make meaningful and lasting influences in our community. Over the course of four decades HELP and its devoted staff and volunteers have exemplified the ideals of selflessness and public service. I know that the hundreds of thousands of individuals whose lives have been touched by the work of HELP would share in my desire to express our gratitude. Furthermore, I would like to congratulate HELP. The positive changes they have made amongst the lives of individuals and within the community are truly remarkable achievements. I am grateful and honored to recognize the 40th anniversary of HELP of Southern Nevada today.

BIG OIL

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, the explosion on the Deepwater Horizon oil rig in the Gulf of Mexico was a tragedy for the workers killed and their families. It has also become an economic disaster for the people of the gulf coast and an unparalleled environmental disaster for our Nation. As we work to stop and clean up the spill, we also need to end the coziness between big oil and the Federal agencies that regulate the industry. That chummy relationship has shielded big oil from being held accountable for years, and it is high time we make sure that government is cracking down on, not cozying up to, the oil companies.

As I discussed a few days ago at a Judiciary Committee hearing examining liability issues related to the BP oil spill, Congress should take action right away to deter wrongdoing and encourage the kind of responsible, careful drilling we need. One way to do that is to eliminate big oil's liability cap for natural resources and economic damage caused by oil spills, such as the loss of travel and tourism revenue that businesses across the gulf are experiencing. I am a cosponsor of Senator MENENDEZ's legislation to do just that. The oil spill in the gulf has made it painfully clear that this liability cap is far too low. The existing $75 million liability cap is less than 1 day's worth of profits for BP, which earned almost $6 billion in profits in the first quarter of this year.

But that must be just the beginning of a comprehensive effort to change the way government approaches big oil. For far too long, the oil industry has gotten special treatment, in large part because it is one of the wealthiest, most powerful special interests in Washington. The oil and gas industry gave $35 million in political donations in the last Presidential election cycle, and $¼ billion in donations over the last 20 years. One of the reasons I have worked to curb the influence of money in politics for so many years is because of the undue influence of big oil.

Those donations have contributed to the oil industry's access to Congress and to the agencies that are supposed to regulate oil exploration and production. It is no coincidence that the oil industry has received unjustified tax breaks and other favorable treatment for years. That has to change, and we can start by getting rid of taxpayer-funded giveaways for the oil and gas industry, as I have proposed in my Control Spending Now Act, legislation to cut the deficit by about $½ trillion over 10 years. Part of that bill would end a taxpayer subsidy for the processing of oil company permits. I also support efforts to repeal over $35 billion in oil and gas tax breaks targeted by President Obama for elimination. As we seek to rein in record deficits, it is time to end these unjustified giveaways to an industry that doesn't need taxpayer support.

Congress must also make sure that regulators aren't simply acting as rubberstamps for whatever the oil industry wants. Unfortunately, too often the Federal Government ends up listening more to the powerful industries it is supposed to be regulating than to the consumers it is supposed to be protecting. Whether it is Wall Street or big oil that is calling the shots, the result is rarely good for my constituents in Wisconsin.

Another critical way to hold big oil accountable is to pass my "Use It or Lose It" legislation to ensure oil companies are diligently exploring the Federal leases they currently have, and not sitting on those leases in an effort to drive up gas prices. We should also restore the Clean Water Act, CWA, to its full strength. The CWA is the main statute used to prosecute polluters who dump oil into waters of the United States, and it is never been more important to ensure that polluters are held accountable for the damage they do to our economy and our environment.

Congress has the responsibility to look ahead and do what it takes to prevent a disaster like the one in the gulf from happening again. We have to come at this issue from all sides to make sure that BP is held accountable for the current spill, that we work to prevent future spills with proper regulations, and that we upend the culture that provides tax breaks and special treatment for big oil in the first place. Working to stop and clean up the spill in the gulf is not enough. Congress has to clean up the cozy Washington culture that favors big corporations over the needs of American people, and over the protection of our economy and our air and water.

GUINEA

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, Guinea is a fragile, resource-rich state in West Africa that has been plagued by political uncertainty since the death of its longtime President, Lansana Conté, in December 2008. Much of this upheaval can be attributed to the fact that the President, in his 25 long years of rule, left little room for governance reform. His autocratic legacy included abusive security forces, a collapsed economy, a divided civil society, and a squabbling opposition. As a result, there was no clear successor and no viable path forward. President Conté's commitment to democracy was cosmetic, at best, and easily trumped by his dictatorial tendencies and unwillingness to relinquish power.

As many Guinea watchers expected, the day after President Conté died, a military junta calling itself the National Council for Democracy and Development, CNDD, seized power and dissolved the constitution and legislature. Given the deteriorated state of governance and widespread impunity, the junta was initially hailed by many as a safeguard against the endemic problems of corruption, insecurity, and rampant drug trafficking—all of which contribute to the lack of legitimate governance. Furthermore, the fact that the CNDD appointed a civilian prime minister and promised to hold Presidential and legislative elections gave many Guineans hope that the country was on the verge of a legitimate political transition.

But those elections were repeatedly postponed, despite repeated claims by the junta that a transition to civilian rule would occur. As the months passed, a number of signs, including the appointment of military officers to key government posts, indicated that CNDD was in fact not planning to relinquish power and was certainly not ready—or willing—to oversee an election process.

In fact, over the next few months the CNDD sought to tighten its hold on power severely, including an attempt in September 2009 by security forces to brutally crush a peaceful, prodemocracy rally. I joined many in the international community at that time in condemning such blatant and violent repression. A U.N. Commission was sent to investigate the atrocities while the CNDD crackdown cast a dark shadow on Guinea's prospects for peace and stability.

During this period, I was pleased to see the Obama administration engage proactively to help reverse Guinea's political crisis—particularly in the aftermath of the shooting of CNDD leader Captain Dadis Camara. In those fragile moments of uncertainty, the consistent diplomacy undertaken by our senior officials played an important role. Working with key regional actors and organizations, the State Department helped to broker an important political agreement, known as the Ouagadougou Declaration, which was widely welcomed as an end to the protracted political vacuum that had existed. The signing of this agreement ushered in a transitional united government that, while imperfect, has been actively supported by the Obama administration.

Unquestionably Guinea remains on delicate ground but the upcoming Presidential elections scheduled for June 27 create an opportunity for Guinea—and our bilateral relationship—to progress forward. Undoubtedly the process will be chaotic and messy, but there is a good chance we could see this beleaguered country bounce back from decades of mismanagement. Of course, in order for Guinea to truly progress, these elections must be the beginning of serious and sustained reform—a process which must also include accountability for the abuses committed in September 2009. Elections are only one component of the democratic process, but still they are a significant one and may give the people of Guinea their long deserved chance to finally turn the page on their troubled political history.

While there are plenty of factors that could lead to another election postponement including the will of the transitional government and the capacity and efficiency of the election commission, I remain optimistic that this will not occur. Certainly there are real challenges to fostering democracy given Guinea's history, but the recent commitment from the Acting President and Chief of the Army to remain neutral and ensure the elections are free, credible, and transparent should not go without notice. I have long said that promoting and supporting democratic institutions should be a key tenet of our engagement with Africa, as institution building is essential to Africa's stability and its prosperity. In the case of Guinea—a nation that has great potential to flourish and thrive—credible elections are an important first step on the road to better governance.

TRIBUTE TO RON GETTELFINGER

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, leaders demonstrate their talent and character not when life is easy but at times of crisis. During the greatest crisis in the history of the American auto industry, that industry's workers and the communities in which they live have benefited enormously from the leadership of a quiet Kentuckian whose devotion to working families cannot be overstated.

When Ron Gettelfinger took office as president of the United Auto Workers in 2002, I do not think anyone, and certainly not Ron, foresaw the turbulence ahead. As his 8 years as president of the UAW come to a close, it is time to congratulate and thank him for exceptional leadership in tough times.

Ron navigated those rough waters guided by two lights: a clear-eyed as-essment of what was necessary to preserve America's auto industry, and the sure knowledge that millions of families depended on its preservation.

That knowledge came from Ron's days on the assembly line at Ford's Louisville assembly plant, from his days as his plant's local president, from his service as regional president for UAW members in Indiana and Kentucky, and from his time at Solidarity House in Detroit. He is a sharp, tough-minded negotiator, but underlying his talents and skills is a real emotional bond with the workers who have depended on his leadership. That bond with his members meant that when Ron Gettelfinger asked them to make sacrifices, they knew it was not because he was taking the easy way out, but because it was necessary.

The sacrifices have been great. Ron knows this better than anybody. But he also knows that in making those sacrifices, the workers of the UAW have set the stage for a renaissance in the U.S. auto industry, one that is already taking shape in the form of increased sales, more consumer confidence, and a commitment to the clean energy technologies that will shape our transportation future.

I have been proud to stand with Ron Gettelfinger in many of his battles. Members of the United Auto Workers honor the leaders who over nearly a century of progress and challenge have guided their union. I have no doubt that for generations yet to come, those workers will honor Ron's work in guiding their union through one of the most difficult periods in its history.

TRIBUTE TO NINA THOMAS

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, today I express my sincere congratulations and best wishes to Nina Thomas on her retirement as registrar at Vermont Law School. Since 1976, Nina has served that institution with dedication and a devotion to its students. As Ms. Thomas ends her many years of exceptional service to Vermont Law School and its students, I wish her the very best as she enters this new chapter of her life. I thank her for her service, and I know her commitment over the years has helped to make the school the special, unique place it is today.

Nina Thomas is a native of Vermont, having attended grade school in the same building that is now part of the Vermont Law School campus in South Royalton, VT. In 1976 she returned to be part of a fledgling institution where her care, her counsel, and her wisdom have made a difference in the lives of many law students who have passed through her office. Her dedication helped the school grow into a successful institution for legal education that is a source of pride for Vermont and Vermonters. Her career spanned from the early days of the school's beginnings to the present, where it stands as a national leader in environmental legal thinking and learning.

As Nina Thomas enters her retirement, I hope she will take great comfort in knowing that the mark she left at Vermont Law School will be a lasting one and that her contributions are part of the school's strong foundation. I know she will be dearly missed by faculty and staff and most especially the students to whom she has given so much.

TRIBUTE TO TOM HOWARD

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I would like to pay tribute today to a man who has provided immeasurable leadership and dedication to the lives of young people and families around the State of Vermont, Tom Howard of East Montpelier. After 31 years as executive director, Tom will be retiring this month from the Washington County Youth Service Bureau/Boys & Girls Club.

Tom is a native Vermonter who, while growing up, lived in the Philippines, Panama, Germany, and throughout the United States. He served in the U.S. Army in Korea between 1963 and 1966, and earned a B.A. from Johnson State College in history and international relations in 1970. Tom went on to earn a master's degree in executive development in public service at Ball State University in 1974, and wrote his master's thesis on youthful offenders.

Appointed as executive director of the bureau in 1979, Tom has built the agency into a diverse organization with statewide impact. Under his leadership, the organization developed cutting-edge programs, like the Return House in Barre, VT—a program operated by the Washington County Youth Service Bureau for 18- to 22-year-old young men who are returning to the community after being incarcerated. In addition to his commitment to working with young people and youthful offenders, Tom has secured millions of dollars in Federal, State, and foundation grants to bring sustainable services and opportunities to youth.

We are fortunate in Vermont. I am always impressed by the high level of collaboration on behalf of Vermont's communities to solve its problems. Over the years, I have brought the Senate Judiciary Committee to Vermont several times for field hearings to explore community efforts to counter drug-related crime in rural America. On each occasion, I have looked to Tom for testimony about the work he and his organization have done with youthful offenders. Tom not only offers his knowledge of work going on around the State, but provides the expertise of his organization, and personal stories about the lives of the young people he works with.

As a fellow photographer, I would be remiss if I failed to note that Tom's office documents a life full of adventure. His walls depict the bureau's accomplishments—such as when he was invited to represent Vermont's 21st Century Community Learning Center Programs at a White House Ceremony hosted by President Bill Clinton. They also capture the faces of those who inspire him, like the pupils for whom he served as a teacher and counselor at the Wittlich Prison in West Germany.

I believe Tom embodies the core principles of what it takes to serve Vermont's youth, from his skill as an administrator, to his contribution as a caring person. I thank Tom for all that he does, and I commend his work to the Senate as an example to others. We are grateful for his service to Vermont's young people and families for the past 31 years. Marcelle and I wish Tom and his family all the best.

REMEMBERING ROBERT LITTLE EBERT

• Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to Robert Little Ebert, a respected and inspiring Maryland community leader and philanthropist who passed away at age 93 on May 9, 2010.

Mr. Ebert served as Allegany County commissioner from 1962 to 1970, and he continued to dedicate himself to the progress and prosperity of the area throughout his lifetime. Mr. Ebert was especially dedicated to eradicating poverty throughout his community, and he demonstrated a consistent willingness to help people through his involvement in various philanthropic and community organizations.

Mr. Ebert was born in Parkersburg, WV in 1916, and attended Marietta College in Ohio, graduating in 1938. He later worked as a radio newscaster in the Midwest and served as an Ensign in the U.S. Navy during World War II. Following the war, Mr. Ebert moved to Cumberland, MD, to join his mother in the S.T. Little Jewelry Company, a family business founded by his great-grandfather in 1851. Mr. Ebert eventually became president and general manager of the company, and he devoted himself to the development and success of his business's locale in downtown Cumberland.

Mr. Ebert's leadership and business acumen helped shape downtown Cumberland. He served as chairman of the Downtown Cumberland Business Association and the Downtown Development Commission. He served as chairman of the Board of the Allegany County Department of Social Services and as chairman of the Allegany County Chapter of the American Red Cross and was involved with civic organizations such as the Cumberland Cultural Foundation and the Cumberland Rotary Club.

While Mr. Ebert often wished for his charitable contributions to remain anonymous and tried to stay behind-the-scenes, his philanthropic endeavors eventually inspired him to become the founding donor of the Community Trust Foundation. The Community Trust Foundation, established in 2006, serves Maryland's Allegany and Garrett Counties as well as West Virginia's Mineral County by providing the administrative services, sophisticated investment management, professional advice, and stewardship that help communities maximize their charitable giving and investing.

The Community Trust Foundation served as a stepping stone for Mr. Ebert to establish the Elta Mae and Robert Little Ebert Family Hope Fund. The Family Hope Fund is a leader in fostering cooperation and collaboration among the area's many philanthropic organizations that work to prevent poverty. The fund has made, and will continue to make, enormous achievements thanks to Mr. Ebert's leadership and dedication.

Mr. Ebert was immensely successful professionally, and he was also a loving husband, father, grandfather, and great-grandfather. He leaves behind three daughters, five granddaughters, and four great-grandchildren as well as countless friends and admirers.

I ask my colleagues to join me in remembering the many accomplishments of Mr. Robert Little Ebert and in recognizing him as a truly inspiring community leader and humanitarian.●

REGENT, NORTH DAKOTA

● Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, today I recognize a community in North Dakota celebrating its 100th anniversary. On June 24 to 27, the residents of Regent will gather to celebrate their community's history and founding.

On the peaceful prairies of southwestern North Dakota, a city of just over 200 people will be joyfully celebrating 100 years of trials, tribulations, growth, and happiness. Regent was founded on the railroad lines in 1910. Railroad officials gave it a regal-sounding name, thinking it would become the county seat. Early in its history, Regent was billed as "The Queen City" or "The Wonder City."

My good friend and colleague, a former North Dakota State tax commissioner and current U.S. Senator, BYRON DORGAN is from this great town. Senator DORGAN has never forgotten his roots, and that has helped make him into the highly respected and dedicated public servant that he is.

Today, the Enchanted Highway has brought a larger than life size example of the community's hard work and dedication to the State. The Enchanted Highway is off of Interstate 94 and is approximately 20 miles east of Dickinson, ND. It then extends for 32 miles south to Regent. The world's largest scrap metal sculptures portray part of the countryside's wonder and beauty from "Pheasants on the Prairie" to "Deer Crossing."

The community currently has the luxury of enjoying the finer aspects of life, such as fishing, participating in community activities, or spending time with family. The community's energy can be seen with this year's centennial celebration, filled with the zest and heart of the people. Over 4 days, Regent will be enjoying a watermelon feed, all-school reunion, a dance, parade, choral performances, and many more celebratory events.

Mr. President, I ask the Senate to join me in congratulating Regent, ND, and its residents on their first 100 years and in wishing them well in the future. By honoring Regent and all the other historic small towns of North Dakota, we keep the great tradition of the pioneering frontier spirit alive for future generations. It is places such as Regent that have helped to shape this country into what it is today, which is why this community is deserving of our recognition.

Regent has a proud past and a bright future.●

BRADLEY, SOUTH DAKOTA

● Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, today I pay tribute to the 125th anniversary of the founding of Bradley, SD. This small town has seen more than its fair share of hardships, but with strength and hard work, the citizens consistently band together to make the town an even better place to live and work.

As the Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Paul Railroad expanded, the company decided to build a settlement for the workers to get mail delivered. They called it Prairie Hill. Once trains began running, businesses began forming 2 miles south of the original location. With land donated from the McKinney family, Bradley was eventually formed. This small town quickly became a popular location for homesteaders and developed into the largest primary wheat market in the country. In 1891, a fire nearly destroyed the town. Only a couple of buildings and homes withstood the fire. This strong community rallied together to rebuild their town. Another fire struck in 1916, but 800 volunteers came together, using a bucket brigade to again save the town.

Bradley acquired its name through an interesting turn of events. A group of laborers and a railroad official got in a brawl early one day. W.R. Bradley was visiting the town and saved the life of the chief engineer for construction. He was honored by having the town named after him.

Like a lot of small towns formed in South Dakota at this time, Bradley started as a railroad stop but quickly became more. Bradley is a caring community of people who work together when times get tough. They will honor their historical milestone with a weekend celebration, including craft booth and a food booth, a 5K race, and a softball tournament. I wish them the best for their weekend and their future.●

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM A. RICHARDS

● Mr. REED. Mr. President, today I would like to recognize the accomplishments of William A. Richards—a friend, a colleague, and a dedicated public servant. Bill is retiring this month after nearly half a century of service to the U.S. Army and the Department of Defense. I had the privilege of working with Bill as an instructor at West Point. His lengthy career, as a soldier and as a civilian, truly exemplifies the motto of the Academy—"Duty, Honor, Country."

Bill graduated from West Point in 1967 and served as an infantry officer in Vietnam and Germany. He continued his education at the Woodrow Wilson School at Princeton, receiving a master's degree in public policy. He then returned to West Point to supervise the core curriculum in American Government.

Following his return to West Point, Bill was selected for the prestigious position of speechwriter and executive assistant to NATO's Supreme Allied Commander—Europe. His exceptional work in this position resulted in his next assignment as speechwriter to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger. Bill held this position until his retirement in 1989, after serving for 22 years in uniform.

Bill then started a second career as a budget analyst in the office of the Under Secretary of Defense, Comptroller, at the Pentagon. His military experience and speechwriting skills enabled him to analyze and translate the complexity of the annual defense budget. After 20 years of serving our Nation in this role, Bill retires as someone who is highly respected for his knowledge, experience, and dedication.

I congratulate him on a job well done. He leaves a proud and enduring legacy of public service. I wish Bill and his wife Donna the very best in the years to come.●

MONROE ROTARY CLUB

● Mr. VITTER. Mr. President, today I am proud to recognize the members of the Monroe, LA, Rotary Club who have served our country honorably during war.

I would like to thank Kent Anderson, Edward Cascio, Tom Dansby, Kitty Degee, Donnie Franklin, George Hutchison, John Morris, Walt Pierron, and Barney Tucker for their courageous military service during wartime and for continued civic service in the greater Monroe area.

With the motto "Service Above Self" it is no surprise that these men would be inclined to be a member of Rotary. Their lifetime of service is exhibited not only in service to their fellow citizens during a time of war but also in continued commitment to their community.

Rotary's four-way test asks four questions of all things members think, say, and do. These questions are: Is it the truth? Is it fair to all concerned? Will it build goodwill and better friendships? Will it be beneficial to all concerned? These four simple questions have proven to be excellent guidelines for a life of service. We thank these men for serving the Monroe community with these principles. The Monroe Rotary Club has sponsored many local projects, including Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, youth baseball, the Food Bank of Northeast Louisiana, and the Salvation Army, to name just a few.

Thus, today, I honor these veterans for their distinguished service in the U.S. armed services during wartime, and for their continued service to the State of Louisiana in the Monroe Rotary Club.●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. BARRASSO (for himself, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. CRAPO, Mr. RISCH, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. THUNE, Ms. MURKOWSKI, Mr. BEGICH, Mr. SANDERS, Mr. TESTER, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. ENZI, and Mrs. SHAHEEN):

S. 3485. A bill to amend title 23, United States Code, to improve highway mobility in rural States for the benefit of all States; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague Senator

BARRASSO in introducing the Rural Mobility and Access for America Act.

The transportation challenges in rural States are unique. In my State of North Dakota, we have more miles of road per capita than any State in the Nation. There are more than 11,000 miles of highway in North Dakota, which translates into approximately 166 miles of road for every 1,000 people in North Dakota. We have a very large road network with a small population base to support it. In fact, North Dakota only has 16 people supporting each lane mile of Federal-aid road. The national average is 129 people per lane mile.

Highways in North Dakota and other rural States connect the Nation and help ensure the effective movement of people and goods across the country. Today, the highways in the western part of my State are being impacted by a rise in truck traffic as a result of the oil boom occurring from the development of the Bakken formation. Our roads and highways are seeing a dramatic increase in trucks that are transporting supplies to the oil fields or oil to gathering lines.

The agriculture industry is also reliant on a strong, nationally connected road network to move products and services. Approximately 69 percent of the goods shipped annually from North Dakota are carried by truck. Significant and growing agricultural businesses throughout my state rely on the road network to receive raw goods and transport their finished products to market.

In addition, we have a large percentage of truck traffic that crosses our state. Sixty percent of the truck traffic does not originate or terminate within the state, but it still has an impact on our highways. In the next 10 years, commercial trucking in North Dakota is expected to increase by 42 percent.

Discussions surrounding the reauthorization of the highway bill have focused on congestion and the needs of large metropolitan areas. Some of the proposals being advanced shift money from the traditional highway formula programs to set-asides for large metro areas. However, maintaining a nationally connected system requires substantial investments in highways in and across rural areas as well.

It is important that our transportation policy continues to recognize the importance of investment in rural States, like North Dakota. The bill I am introducing with Senator BARRASSO makes certain rural States are not left behind. Under this proposal, if a metro mobility program is included in the highway reauthorization, a corresponding rural program would be funded at a level equal to 1/3 of the amount provided for the metro mobility program. The funds would be distributed evenly to the 18 States that qualify under our bill, and the States could use the funds for any of the eligible uses under the Surface Transportation Program.

Our bill provides an important balance to make sure our roads, both urban and rural, get the support necessary to maintain a nationally connected system. I urge my colleagues to support it.

By Mr. UDALL of Colorado:

S. 3487. A bill to amend the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 to provide electric consumers the right to access certain electric energy information, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss a bill that I filed, called the Electric Consumer Right to Know Act. This bill takes a common-sense step toward broadening consumers' access to data about their electricity usage. On top of that, I am proud to say that this idea came directly from one of my Colorado constituents.

In today's marketplace, consumers have a clear understanding of the price of gasoline and what their car mileage means for their pocket books. They also have ready access to the number of minutes remaining on their cell phone. However, consumers lack clear, timely data about their electricity use and its price. Providing increased transparency will help consumers with their decisions about electricity usage in their home or business.

The bill I filed today would provide timely access to these data by establishing consumers' clear right to access data on their own electricity usage. This right is an important step toward a more effective, reliable and efficient electrical grid, and a step toward helping consumers use electricity more efficiently and save money on their electric bills.

For the past year I have been traveling across Colorado as part of a work force tour to talk directly to Coloradans and hear their innovative policy ideas to create jobs, including hosting an Energy Jobs Summit in Denver back in February. As part of this Summit, we asked experts in energy policy and business to join us for a conversation about how we can better position Colorado and the United States to lead in the 21st century clean energy economy.

We heard from Energy Secretary Steven Chu, Governor Bill Ritter, Senator MICHAEL BENNET, and Congressman ED PERLMUTTER. But, more importantly, we heard from Coloradans who came to share their views on what the Federal Government can do, or in some instances not do, to support job creation and transition to cleaner and more efficient energy use.

One consumer participant at the Summit noted that, even though he had a smart meter at his home, his power company would not let him access his electrical meter readings to learn how he was using electricity. If he could access those readings, he could better understand his energy use, learn how to be more energy efficient and save money. That is why I am introducing the Electric Consumer Right to Know Act to improve communication between the consumers and their utility, spur innovation in developing creative technologies that will save energy, and provide clarity while these programs are being developed.

This bill has several important parts. First, it establishes a framework for the right to access information, defining specifically what that right means, and giving clarity to those who will further develop and enforce that right. This bill says that if you have a smart meter, or similar electronic device that reads electric energy usage, that you ought to have access to the utility company's data on your energy use.

How that access is granted is delineated in three ways in this bill:

If your meter communicates with your utility on an hourly or shorter time interval, my bill states that your meter readings should be available within 24 hours.

Second, if your smart meter is capable of communicating energy use data directly from your meter, under this bill, you have the right to access those data and use them directly at your home or business.

Third, for consumers who have standard meters, with this bill, there are no additional requirements except that your readings shall be available electronically in a timely manner.

Next, the bill directs the Federal Regulatory Energy Commission to convene an open, extensive and inclusive stakeholder process to work through the details of this measure to ensure that implementing the consumers' right to access their information also retains consumer privacy, and ensures the integrity and reliability of the grid.

The outcome of this process will be national guidelines establishing the right of consumers to access their electricity data, including minimum national standards that utilities must meet to ensure that right of access. In developing those minimum standards, the FERC will take into consideration the ongoing and important work at the National Institute of Standards and Technology in developing a smart grid roadmap, as well as the innovative state and local programs already being developed across the country to integrate smart meters into the electrical grid, including Colorado, California, Texas, Pennsylvania, and others.

In Colorado, Xcel Energy has been working with the City of Boulder on a pilot program called SmartGridCity to develop a community-scale smart grid with over 20,000 residents participating. Not only are these consumers improving their understanding of their electricity use, Xcel notes that they have already avoided several blackouts due to the improved communication between consumers and the grid. Power interruptions cost the American economy roughly $80 billion per year and ⅓ of those losses come from interruptions lasting less than five minutes. I am proud to see Coloradans and our state's utilities taking important steps together in learning how to make the grid more reliable, efficient, and help save everyone money.

Finally, part of ensuring the right to access your data includes the right to retain the privacy of your data. When consumers gain access to their data, they will also need to clearly understand how it will be used, especially when consumers grant third-party access to it. This is why this bill states that the FERC will establish, among other important measures, guidelines for consumer consent requirements. Retaining privacy is critical to building consumer trust in the smart grid and facilitating the transition to when the smart grid becomes a part of everyday life for every American family.

I look forward to working with my colleagues and all interested stakeholders in establishing this right, defining it in a way that eliminates unintended consequences, and enforcing this right in a way that improves the efficient use of electrical energy.

This bill is an important first step in implementing smart meters across the country, moving us toward an electrical grid that is more reliable and more efficient a smart grid if you will. There are several pieces of the puzzle that will be required to realize that future, and one critical part of that puzzle is the right of consumers to access their electricity data. I urge my colleagues of both parties to join me in supporting this important legislation.

Mr. SPECTER (for himself, Ms.

STABENOW, and Mr. MENENDEZ):
S. 3493. A bill to reauthorize and enhance Johanna's Law to increase public awareness and knowledge with respect to gynecologic cancers; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought recognition today to introduce The Gynecological Cancer Education and Awareness Act of 2010 also known as Johanna's Law.

Every year, over 80,000 women in the United States are newly diagnosed with some form of gynecologic cancer such as ovarian, uterine, or cervical cancer. In 2009, 28,000 American women are estimated to have died from these cancers.

Early detection of these cancers must be improved to decrease this tragic loss of life. Unfortunately, thousands of women in the U.S. each year aren't diagnosed until their cancers have progressed to more advanced and far less treatable stages. In the case of ovarian cancer, which kills more women in the U.S. than all other gynecologic cancers combined, more than 40 percent of all new diagnoses take place after this cancer has progressed beyond its earliest and most survivable stage.

Women are often diagnosed many months, sometimes more than a year after they first experience symptoms due to a lack of knowledge of early warning signs of gynecological cancers. Adding to the challenge of a prompt and accurate diagnosis is the similarity of gynecological cancer symptoms to those of more common gastrointestinal conditions and benign gynecologic conditions such as perimenopause and menopause. Women too often receive diagnoses reflecting these benign conditions without their physicians having first considered gynecologic cancers as a possible cause of the symptoms.

The Gynecological Cancer Education and Awareness Act has improved early detection of gynecologic cancers by creating a national awareness and an education outreach campaign to inform physicians and individuals of the risk factors and symptoms of these diseases. When gynecological cancer is detected in its earliest stage, patients 5-year survival rates are greater than 90 percent and many go on to live normal, healthy lives.

The national awareness campaign has been carried out by the Department of Health and Human Services, HHS, to increase women's awareness and knowledge of gynecologic cancers. The campaign has maintained and distributed a supply of written materials that provide information to the public about gynecologic cancers. Further, the program has developed public service announcements encouraging women to discuss their risks for gynecologic cancers with their physicians, and inform the public about the availability of written materials and how to obtain them. The cost of continuing this awareness campaign is $5.5 million per year from 2010-2012, totaling $16.5 million.

The educational outreach campaign will be carried out through demonstration grants through HHS. These demonstration grants will go to local and national non-profits to test different outreach and education strategies, including those directed at providers, women, and their families. Groups with demonstrated expertise in gynecologic cancer education, treatment, or in working with groups of women who are at especially high risk will be given priority. Grant funding recipients will also be asked to work in cooperation with health providers, hospitals, and state health departments. The projected cost of the educational outreach campaign is $5 million per year from 2010-2012, totaling $15 million.

This legislation was brought to my attention by my friend Fran Drescher, who was diagnosed with uterine cancer in 2000 and whose diagnosis was also delayed due to her lack of knowledge about symptoms of this disease. She has recovered from uterine cancer and is advocating on behalf of gynecological cancer awareness. She also brought to my attention one of the many victims of gynecological cancers, Johanna Silver Gordon, after whom this bill is named, who was diagnosed at an advanced stage of ovarian cancer.

Johanna, the daughter and sister of physicians, was extremely health conscious taking the appropriate measures to maintain a healthy lifestyle including exercising regularly, eating nutritiously, and receiving annual pap smears and pelvic exams. Johanna however did not have the information to know that the gastric symptoms she experienced in the fall of 1996 were common symptoms of ovarian cancer. She didn't learn these crucial facts until after she was diagnosed at an advanced stage of this cancer. Despite aggressive treatment that included four surgeries, various types of chemotherapy, and participation in two clinical trials, Johanna died from ovarian cancer 3 1/2 years after being diagnosed. Johanna is survived by her sister Sheryl Silver who has tirelessly worked to increase the information available regarding gynecological cancers.

As former Chairman and Ranking Member of the Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education Appropriations Subcommittee, I led, along with Senator HARKIN, the effort to double funding for the National Institutes of Health, NIH, over 5 years. Funding for the NIH has increased from $12 billion in fiscal year 1995 to $27 billion in fiscal year 2003. In 2004, the NIH, through the National Cancer Institute provided $243 million for gynecological cancer research. We must continue this growth to gain more information about gynecological cancers so that we can find a cure for this cancer.

I believe this bill can provide desperately needed information to physicians and individuals so that women can be diagnosed faster and more effectively. I urge my colleagues to move this legislation forward promptly.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATE RESOLUTION 553—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE THAT CONGRESS SHOULD UNWAVERINGLY UPHOLD THE DIGNITY AND INDEPENDENCE OF OLDER AMERICANS

Ms. STABENOW (for herself and Mr. LIEBERMAN) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions:

S. RES. 553

Whereas older Americans are a diverse group of men and women who have worked hard throughout their lives to provide for their families and defend the United States during critical periods in history;

Whereas older Americans deserve a dignified, secure, and independent retirement for the years of service they have provided to the United States;

Whereas the percentage of the United States population that is 65 years of age or older is rapidly expanding, particularly veterans;

Whereas many Americans are living longer, working longer, and enjoying healthier, more active lifestyles than past generations;

Whereas older Americans rely heavily on Federal programs such as Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid, and, for veterans, TRICARE, for financial security and high-quality, affordable health care;

Whereas the Older Americans Act of 1965 (42 U.S.C. 3001 et seq.) provides Federally-funded community-based social services and nutritional support programs to more than 10,000,000 older Americans each year;

Whereas notwithstanding Federal programs, older Americans experience greater financial losses during economic downturns and are subject to higher incidences of poverty, hunger, and homelessness;

Whereas older Americans seek to leave a legacy of a strong and stable economy to future generations that maintains a commitment to Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid, and the provision of benefits to veterans;

Whereas the 111th Congress has passed legislation that—

(1) protects the dignity of older Americans by strengthening efforts to eliminate waste, fraud, and abuse in Medicare and Medicaid; and

(2) prevents irresponsible lending practices that target older Americans and threaten to erode the resources that older Americans have worked their entire lives to save: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that Congress should unwaveringly uphold the dignity and independence of older Americans by supporting efforts that guarantee for the older Americans—

(1) financial security;

RECEPTION OF FORMER MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

The Speaker pro tempore presided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On behalf of the House, I consider it a high honor and a distinct personal privilege to have the opportunity of welcoming so many of our former Members and colleagues as may be present here for this occasion. We all pause to welcome them.

The Chair now calls on the Honorable John J. Rhodes, president of the association, to take the chair.

Mr. RHODES (presiding). It is my pleasure at this point in time to yield the floor to the vice president of the association and my great friend, the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Hertel, for the purpose of making a presentation.

Mr. HERTEL. I thank the gentleman from Arizona.

It is always a distinct privilege to be back in this revered Chamber, and we appreciate the opportunity to present today the annual report of the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress.

Our association's president, Jay Rhodes of Arizona, along with some of our colleagues, will report on the activities and projects of our organization. Before we get to this report, however, it is my distinct honor and pleasure to present our 2010 Distinguished Service Award to William H. Gray of the great State of Pennsylvania.

Bestowing our association's highest award on Bill Gray was an easy decision and one that was long overdue. The reward recognizes distinguished service, and few Members have served their community and country with more distinction than Bill Gray did before, during and after his years here on Capitol Hill.

Majority Whip Gray embodies the spirit of our award, having spent his post-congressional career as an education leader, which he believes is his higher calling for our entire country. As president and CEO of the United Negro College Fund, he worked to elevate historically black colleges, and believes they provide vital educational bridges that need continued support. We are thrilled to honor him today. Bill, please join me here at the dais.

You know, Bill first of all had to have the political hard sense and experience to become the whip to be elected by the caucus. And then once he was the whip, on a daily and weekly basis he had to lead us and be able to count those votes in such a political way. So it is not just education and public service, it is being one of the greatest politicians that we have had in the history of our House. On behalf of the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress, it is a great pleasure and honor for to me to present our 2010 Distinguished Service Award to William H. Gray of Pennsylvania.

The plaque is inscribed as followed:

The 2010 Distinguished Service Award is presented by the United States Association of Former Members of Congress to Chairman William Herbert Gray, III, for his lifetime of exceptional public service. Both in and out of Congress, Minister Bill Gray has demonstrated his tremendous dedication to civil rights, fairness and equality. Representing the State of Pennsylvania with great distinction, he served as the first African-American majority whip and the first African-American chairman of the House Budget Committee. His leadership helped young Americans obtain the dream of a college education, his perseverance contributed to the fall of apartheid, and his humanity brought relief to the people of Haiti. Congressman Bill Gray is an inspiration to us all, and his former colleagues from both sides of the political aisle salute him today.

Mr. GRAY. Thank you to the president, the distinguished gentleman from Arizona, to my former colleague from Michigan, to all of you who are here, those who I had the privilege of serving with, and those that I have known over the years through outstanding service since or before.

It is a real privilege and a pleasure to be here today and to receive this award because of the group that is making it, the former Members of Congress who gave service not only when they were elected officials, but continue to give service, inspiring fellow Americans to get involved in public service and understand that democracy must have participation by all of its citizens.

Sometimes the debate can get kind of tough. But one thing we all learned long ago, and that is that civility is the cement that holds the bricks of democracy together. And so we must always keep in mind in our public service that although we disagree, we can never have the point that we reach in our society where we think of each other as evil because of our disagreements. We are all fellow Americans fighting for the best.

I want to recognize one of our former Members, because in a way our partnership symbolizes that civility, that working together, even though we probably in the 10 or 12 years that we spent together here in the House of Representatives, he and I never voted alike on anything, not even the approval of the Journal, I don't think. He was from Texas, from San Antonio, and a rock-ribbed conservative, and I was from Philadelphia, a rock-ribbed progressive, and today we are partners in a firm. And that is Tom Loeffler, who came to the House about the same time as I did, and yet today we are working together.

So I want to thank all of the members of the Former Members Association for this outstanding award. I enjoyed immensely my years on this floor and in this body serving with so many of you. I have enjoyed immensely my work in education. But above all, I have enjoyed my work of 45 years as a Baptist preacher.

Today I thank you for this award, and continue to say what my father said to me years ago. He said, "Service is the rent you pay in the house of democracy." Thank you, and let us continue to work together to pay good rent for the next generation and broaden the house of democracy.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. RHODES. Congressman Gray, thank you very much for being with us today, and for all that you have done for this institution, and this country, and for our God. Thanks, Bill. I appreciate it.

I am going to yield the chair in a moment to the gentleman from Michigan to preside over the balance of the meeting. I want to take a special moment—actually, I am going to take several special moments, because the majority leader has entered the Chamber, and it's my hope that he will have some comments and remarks to make for us.

Mr. HOYER. Good morning and welcome back.

Many of you, of course, visit on a relatively regular basis. Others of you we don't get to see as often. I now have been here long enough to know almost all of you, and have served with almost all of you. And I am always pleased to join here to welcome you back to the House.

I have my own Connie Morella from Maryland and Bev Byron. You know the story about Bev Byron. We met in 1962. She was wondering who this skinny kid was who had written to her husband, "Dear President Byron." He was president of the Young Democrats of Maryland. And I signed it "Steny Hamilton Hoyer," and she has not let me forget the officiousness of that letter.

But I am so pleased to be with all of you. I have lamented on numerous occasions welcoming you here that when I first came here it was 1981, and clearly the partisanship was starting to elevate.

All of you know, because I have said on so many different occasions, what respect and deep, deep affection I have for Bob Michel. Respect in the sense that I thought he brought the best of what the American people want and represented to the House of Representatives. He brought a philosophical judgment as to what policies we ought to support, direction the country ought to go, but he also brought a deep conviction that what the American public expected of us was to work together, respect one another, and try to do the best that we could for the American people.

Unfortunately, as all of you have seen, we are a deeply polarized Congress. That does not mean that we don't sit down together and talk about issues from time to time. Leader BOEHNER has just walked in. He and I are working on a joint enterprise that we think may have some real positive effect. And hopefully, we can win the day on that issue. But for the most part, we are not working together as collegially as I think the American public would like us to do.

The problems that confront our country, as all of you know, are very, very substantial. We have an immediate crisis, the oil crisis, which has given to the American public a sense of almost helplessness that their government is not responding in a way that can stop this oil from leaking. Clearly, BP and the entire oil industry has extraordinary incentive to do that. They have been technically unable to do it. We are in deep water both figuratively and literally on this issue.

JOHN and I were on a television program on Sunday morning together on which we both agreed that, A, BP ought to be held responsible, and B, we need to do everything we possibly could to not only stop the oil, but to help those who have been hurt, which nobody can contemplate exactly how broad that will be.

The other issue that we are grappling with that I feel keenly about that has gotten cumulatively worse during the 30 years that I have been here, and that is the fiscal crisis that confronts our country. We are in deep debt. We are approaching or about at 90 percent of GDP in terms of our debt load. We are moving towards 100 percent. No country in the world can sustain that kind of debt load for very long and remain healthy, vibrant, and growing.

So we need your continued wisdom and counsel. Notwithstanding the fact you are not voting, you are all very, very influential people in this country and in your States and in your districts still. And your voice is needed, as we try to reach some bipartisan consensus on how to achieve a more positive fiscal picture confronting our country.

But notwithstanding those serious issues, as someone who just turned 71 yesterday, and I am sending the message to my constituents that I have no intention of retiring; I hope they have no intention of retiring me. I enjoy my service here. I continue. And I enjoyed serving with all of you on both sides of the aisle.

So on behalf of Speaker PELOSI, JOHN will speak for himself, obviously, but I know in a very bipartisan way we welcome all of you back here. We enjoy seeing you. We enjoy reminiscing about the good times, about the challenges, and about how we got things done, and how we might apply those lessons of the past to the solving of the problems that confront us today.

So thank you all very, very much. Enjoy this day, and make sure that you come back on a regular basis to give us, as I said, not only advice and counsel, but perhaps even encouragement. Not everybody in America, as you have noticed, is giving us encouragement.

You know, the bad news for Democrats is that we are very low down in the polls. The good news for Democrats is Republicans are there with us. They don't like any of us. They don't think any of us have got it. So working together, perhaps we can reinstate their confidence and reinstate a positive, more confident America as we move forward, as you have done when you served America so well in this body. Thank you very much.

I now, if I might, the distinguished gentleman from Arizona, I know he wants to recognize him, but I would be pleased to yield to my friend with whom I from time to time have the opportunity to work together, but always try to have a cordial and positive relationship with, the Republican leader, Mr. BOEHNER.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. HOYER, my wife and I own a little piece of property in Calvert County which happens to be in a major part of your district, and one of the things that we constantly notice is between Prince Frederick and Solomon's Island, roughly every half mile there is a post office. Now, I know that you and everybody else thinks that earmarks are not good, but you are not going to be defeated as long as you keep building those post offices.

Mr. HOYER. I appreciate your confidence, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RHODES. The Chair recognizes the Republican leader.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time in my 20 years here that I have seen the Speaker lobbying from the podium.

Let me welcome all of my colleagues here to the Capitol today. There are a good number of you. I would hope that some of you would work to get more of your colleagues to come back for what really is a very special day, and we, on a bipartisan basis, really do welcome you and glad to see many of you. Some of you, this is the only day of the year I get to see; others I get to see a little more often, like these two over here.

To Bill Gray, congratulations. Bill Gray has spent a lifetime of service to his country, whether it was the years that he spent here, the years that he spent with a number of organizations where he has provided exemplary service, and I am very pleased that Bill is being honored today by all of you. He and I had a chance to serve together. I was a young pup, he was one of the senior leaders in the other party, but we still always had an opportunity to talk to one another.

As all of you know, we continue, as STENY said, to face big challenges, and what is really of interest to me and I'm sure to Steny is the political rebellion that is going on in America today. I have never seen anything like this. When you look at what is happening, we've got people who have been driven off the couch, off their easy chair, away from their TV, and into the streets protesting what their government is doing. The result of this, we will see what happens in November, but it really is—there's nothing short of a political rebellion going on in the country, something like I have never seen in my lifetime. It is creating more challenges for the Members that are here and clearly will create challenges for candidates on both sides of the aisle as we get into November.

Let me just once again say thank you for being here. Anytime that we can be of service to all of you, we would certainly like to do that.

Mr. RHODES. Thank you, Mr. Leader.

I wasn't aware that I was lobbying, but if that's the way you take it, then that's fine.

I am going to yield the chair to the gentleman from Michigan, but before I do, I want to pay special recognition to my Republican leader, Bob Michel, and to three individuals who were elected at the same time that I was in 1986: Jack Buechner, Ernie Konnyu and Connie Morella. I appreciate you being here.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HERTEL. I thank the gentleman from Arizona.

I want to thank the majority leader who has always taken the time to participate with us and to welcome us here on the House floor but has always participated in our other activities, too, and encouraged us to continue in serving our country in the capacity of former Members. He reminds me of 30 years ago when he talked about Minority Leader Bob Michel, who we all looked to for advice, and those times of, as he said, really the beginning of increased partisanship.

But just as Majority Leader HOYER and Mr. BOEHNER were last year at our golf tournament for the wounded warriors playing golf and there were some press excerpts of them working together, the majority leader has always reached out to the other side because, while we have partisan differences, as I saw with him back 30 years ago with our esteemed Speaker Tip O'Neill and our revered minority leader, Bob Michel, they were able to show us how you fight for what you believe in, you fight for your partisan position, you fight for your party position, but in the end, you're elected by the people to serve this country and to reach the best accommodation and policy in the interest of the United States for the future and the people of our country.

In that light, the president of our association, Jay Rhodes, has set up a bipartisan day tomorrow where we have former Speakers of the House, Foley and Hastert, and Dick Gephardt and others coming forward, a full day over at the National Archives to talk about the need for bipartisanship and what it has meant in the past. I know of Tip O'Neill's great respect for Bob Michel; I know of Tip O'Neill's great love for Jerry Ford, who was minority leader and then President of the United States; and there was never anybody who would give an inch on an issue that he believed in than Speaker O'Neill and neither was there from President Ford from my State of Michigan. And yet as partisan as they were in their leadership, there is no one in this country who doesn't know how their leadership really was embodied for the entire Nation and the people of this country, to serve them and to move things forward.

That's the example that we see, just as we saw yesterday Minority Leader BOEHNER coming out to our golf tournament again for the wounded warriors and showing his leadership again today by welcoming us with the majority leader and the comity that they have in working together on policy issues for our country.

Again, I am reminded of the foresight of our leader from Arizona, having this bipartisan day tomorrow, but not just a day. It's a yearlong program that he has established to talk about the need for bipartisanship and the examples of bipartisanship in our future.

So, today, I would like to ask President Jay Rhodes to step down here to the dais with me, and before you deliver our association's report to the Congress of what has been going on this last year under your leadership, I want to thank you for 2 years of outstanding leadership as president of this organization. Our membership and board of directors really appreciate all that you have done for the Former Member Association, and we really can't capture all the time that you've spent, all the hours, all the leadership, all of your iconic and ironic wit that you've demonstrated in this last year of leadership and also here on the House floor, but all the hard work you've done on our international issues, on our national issues, on the Congress to Campus program, Jay, and the way that you've taken time to listen to all the members of our association to implement their ideas and to involve all the different members of our association to move things forward.

So I would like you to come down here, Jay, because we have a special plaque for you.

Mr. RHODES. I don't think it's appropriate to leave the chair unattended.

Mr. HERTEL. Well, I will come up to you, then.

Let me read this, which is presented to the Honorable John J. Rhodes, III:

In recognition and appreciation of his strong leadership as President of the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress. His tremendous enthusiasm and effectiveness will always be remembered by his very grateful colleagues.

Washington, D.C., June 15, 2010.

Jay, we want to thank you for all that you've done in your continued service with us as a past president, how much we appreciate it. And we are anxious to hear your report of our organization.

Mr. RHODES. Thank you, Mr. Soon-to-be-President Hertel. I have really enjoyed the time that you and I have spent together, along with the members of the board and the executive committee. I look forward to continuing my relationship with the association, and I look forward to your presidency—which is not formal yet, so don't get too excited.

I now yield the chair to the Honorable Dennis Hertel.

Mr. HERTEL (presiding). The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana, MIKE PENCE, the Republican Conference Chair. Thank you for coming.

Mr. PENCE. Thank you, Mr. President. Thank you all.

Those of you that don't watch C-SPAN incessantly may not know I serve as the House Republican Conference Chairman now, and I am just honored to be here with our former leader, a man deeply admired, and to see so many familiar faces back on the floor, back in the people's House. To Congressman Rhodes, it is wonderful to see you. Congratulations on a great tenure in leadership.

Thank you all for being here. We just adjourned the House Republican Conference, and I think you will see former colleagues and current Members coming over to say hello. We just appreciate your continued leadership. I appreciated what JOHN BOEHNER said about your continued role in the leadership of this country. So many of you have gone on from Congress and played an even greater role in the life of this Nation in various industry and philanthropic ways, and I want to commend you for that.

But let me also say I want to commend Congressman Rhodes and our new president for the call for bipartisanship. In the 9 years that I have served on Capitol Hill, I remain convinced that we could learn an awful lot from those who have gone before on this floor in this current time. As we think about the extraordinary challenges facing this country at home and abroad, the hard choices that we are going to have to be making that can only be made if we act as Americans first and not on a partisan basis, please know that we're going to continue to turn to the men and women who have served in this place before.

We will have a competitive election, I expect, this fall. The American people will decide what the composition of this place looks like. I want to tell you as I came onto the floor and I saw a lot more people on this side than on that side, it's kind of how it feels for us Republicans right now, but whatever the American people decide. I want to thank you for being here today. Thank you for your involvement in the former Members group; some men and women that I have had the privilege of serving with are here.

But I also want to challenge you, the extraordinary and intractable problems—rising deficits and debts, a difficult economy—we need to turn to the wisdom of the men and women who have been here before. We need to turn to you to facilitate an environment of good will where we can solve these problems for this and future generations of Americans, and I know that we will. When I see where we have come from, the part of this national life that you've been a part of, I know that we will meet these challenges and make this the next great American century.

Thank you all for your involvement. God bless you all. It's an honor to speak to you this morning.

Mr. HERTEL. Thank you very much for taking the time. We appreciate the gentleman from Indiana for coming today.

I was reminded of—well, two things. I see Mike Barnes here joining the two gentlewomen from Maryland; I wish every State had the same representation as Maryland does here at our meeting today. But I am reminded to tell about the victory of the Democrats yesterday at the golf tournament for the wounded warriors. I think it's the second year in a row that Democrats have been successful. Marty Russo reminded me of that today.

And now, I will call on our president, the gentleman from Arizona, for his annual report on the association's work under his leadership.

Mr. RHODES. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope that the Democrats enjoyed their victory yesterday, and I trust that that will be just about the end of it.

We are very constrained in terms of the time that we have available to us; we have to vacate the floor by 11 o'clock.

There are three of our association members who have reports to deliver about some of the activities of the association over the course of the past year.

I would first like to recognize the gentleman from New York, Mr. McHugh, distinguished former president of the association and a tremendous asset to the association, for his report on the Congress to Campus program.

Mr. MCHUGH. Thank you very much, Jay. It's a great privilege, as always, to report again on this outstanding program.

As you have indicated in the past, this Congress to Campus program has been administered by our association now for 3 years in cooperation with the Stennis Center. During that time, the program has experienced marked growth and has expanded to include a number of community colleges as well as traditional universities.

As most of you know, this is the association's flagship program. It sends bipartisan teams of former Members to colleges, universities, and high schools across the country to educate the next generation of leaders on the importance of civic engagement. The participating students benefit from the interaction with our association members, whose knowledge and experience clearly are a unique resource. Our members at the same time benefit through their continued involvement in public service and the ability to engage young people on issues of real importance to them.

During each visit, our bipartisan team conducts classes, meets individually with students and faculty, speaks to campus media, participates in both campus and community forums, and meets with local citizens. The program has made both domestic and international visits this academic year, including two separate visits to campuses in the United Kingdom. During the 2009–2010 academic year, the program has made a total of 22 campus visits. More than 35 former Members participated, and I want to thank all of you who took the time from your busy schedules to do so. I also want to encourage those who have not yet had the opportunity to seriously consider doing so. It's a great way to continue our public service after Congress.

I also want to thank the faculty, staff members and students who worked so diligently on each of these visits. Without the hard work of these folks, these visits would not have been possible at all.

We have continued our relationship with the Stennis Center for Public Service in the administration of the program, and we owe a special debt of gratitude, I think, to Tracy Fine of our staff and to Brother Rogers of the Stennis Center for their fine work throughout the year. Our staffs work very closely together to make the program such a success and we also appreciate the continuing financial support from the Stennis Center. We look forward to our continuing association in the years ahead.

In addition to the expansion of the program to community colleges, and with the help of a grant from the U.S. Department of Education, the program has also commenced a concerted effort in partnership with the University of Central Florida and the Lou Frey Institute of Politics and Government to reach out to high school students through a series of webcasts. These programs focus on specific topics related to Congress and the legislative process and are designed as a tool for teachers to showcase these topics and encourage involvement in government. During the fall and the spring, the program was piloted to high schools in Florida and around the country. The broadcasts were taped and streamed live with an in-studio audience of high school students in Washington as part of the Congressional Youth Leadership Council.

We have also continued our working relationship with the People to People Ambassador Program that brings young people to our Nation's capital for a week of events centered on the concepts of character and leadership. This year, the association sent former Members to 30 different speaking engagements in this area and reached hundreds of students through these appearances. These students are younger than those who participate in Congress to Campus activities, but they have already demonstrated a commitment to the ideals that Congress to Campus seeks to promote. The association's involvement in this program allows our members living in the Washington area to speak to these younger students on the importance of public service and to answer their many questions about our country and its government. A number of our members continue to work full-time, and the People to People engagements allow them to continue their public service in this way. The events are typically held in the early morning at suburban locations. Again, I want to thank my colleagues, especially Orval Hansen, Jack Buechner and Martin Frost, who have participated in this program regularly over the past year.

Finally, Jay, I want to say again how grateful we are to those who have made the Congress to Campus program such a great success, and I strongly encourage all of my friends and colleagues to participate in this program either by making a visit to a school or by recommending a school to host the program. As you know, a democracy can prosper only if its citizens are both informed and engaged. As former legislators, we have a particular opportunity and responsibility to encourage such involvement. This program gives us the chance to do so, particularly with our young people.

Again, many thanks to you for your leadership. My congratulations to our friend and colleague, Bill Gray, on this award, and it is great to see all of you back again.

Mr. RHODES. Thank you, Matt. Your continued association and your continued leadership in this organization is unparalleled, and we appreciate it extremely much.

Speaking of unparalleled service, I would like to recognize a former Member, the former president of the association, the Honorable Lou Frey from Florida. I am not going to ask you to make a speech because that would take up the rest of the time.

Lou and I, a month or so ago, were privileged to go to China together, and we had a very, very fascinating trip. He has written eloquently in his Lou Frey reports about that trip, and I hope that you will have an opportunity to review those reports because he has encapsulated, basically, what we did and what we saw.

I would now like to recognize my friend from Maryland, Connie Morella, who will discuss the activities of our various study groups.

Ms. MORELLA. Thank you, Mr. President, and thank you for your exemplary service as president.

Congratulations also to Bill Gray, a great statesman of the year. It is nice to see Bob Michel in this great reunion. I'm Connie Morella and I approved this message.

My message is to give you a little synopsis of the Congressional Study Groups for which the former Members are so noted. The association is pleased to oversee and to administer the Congressional Study Groups on Germany, Turkey and Japan, which create invaluable opportunities for current Members of Congress to engage with their counterparts in the legislative branches of those countries.

The Congressional Study Group on Germany is the association's flagship international program, and it is the largest, most active parliamentary exchange program involving the U.S. Congress and the legislature of another country. Since its inception, which was almost 30 years ago, the study group has offered lawmakers a unique forum to discuss potential avenues of cooperation on issues ranging from the current economic global crisis to NATO's role in Afghanistan. A group of current Members of Congress chair the study group in a bipartisan manner. In the House of Representatives, Congressman RUSS CARNAHAN of Missouri serves as the chairman, and Congressman PHIL GINGREY of Georgia serves as the vice chairman. In the Senate, Senators EVAN BAYH (D-IN) and JEFF SESSIONS (R-AL) serve as co-chairs.

The study group on Germany's programming consists of three pillars: the Distinguished Visitors Program, which offers monthly roundtable discussions on Capitol Hill for Members of Congress, featuring visiting dignitaries from Germany; annual seminars, which meet in Germany and in the United States on a rotating basis; and a senior congressional staff study tour to Germany. Recent Capitol Hill discussion partners include the German Federal Minister of Economy and Technology, the Minister-President of Hessen, and the Minister-President of Lower Saxony.

The highlight of each programming year is the annual Congress-Bundestag seminar, which brings together Members of the U.S. Congress with their counterparts in the German Bundestag for in-depth discussions about issues that affect the transatlantic relationship. In addition to current and former lawmakers from the United States and Germany, representatives from the State Department, the German Foreign Ministry and the business and academic community also participate. Discussion topics are dictated by current events and issues influencing U.S.-German relations. The 27th Annual Congress-Bundestag took place the second week of May in Washington, DC and St. Louis, Missouri. Seminar sessions examined prospects for peace in the Middle East, mutual national security risks, as well as outlook on the 2010 mid term elections. The 2010 Senior Congressional Staff Study Tour to Germany took place at the end of March, bringing 10 House chiefs of staff to Berlin and Cologne.

Since its inception, the Congressional Study Group on Germany has received generous grants from the German Marshall Fund of the United States. The association would like to thank the German Marshall Fund's president, Craig Kennedy, for his support and trust in the study group.

Additional funding to assist with administrative expenses is received from a group of organizations that make up the study group's Business Advisory Council. This council is chaired by former Member of Congress Tom Coleman of Missouri, who served as the chairman of the Congressional Study Group on Germany in the House in 1989. Current Business Advisory Council Members are Airbus, Allianz, BASF, Daimler, Deutsche Telekom, DHL, Eli Lilly, Fresenius, Inc., Lufthansa, RGIT, and Volkswagen.

The Congressional Study Group on Turkey, the second study group, was established in 2005, and it quickly has become a major focus for the Former Members Association, obviously. The study group offers lawmakers a unique educational forum to examine issues ranging from the current economic global crisis to cooperation in the Middle East peace process.

Taking the successful and long-running Congressional Study Group on Germany as a model, the Congressional Study Group on Turkey has grown into a highly relevant and productive program for American and Turkish legislators. The study group is currently active in the House of Representatives, and is co-chaired by Congressman STEVE COHEN of Tennessee and Congresswoman VIRGINIA FOXX of North Carolina. Congressman ED WHITFIELD of Kentucky remains active in the study group as immediate past chair.

Similar to the study group on Germany, the Congressional Study Group on Turkey hosts roundtable discussions on Capitol Hill for Members of Congress featuring visiting dignitaries from Turkey and U.S. administration officials as part of its distinguished visitors program. The study group has recently hosted the Turkish Minister of Foreign Affairs and the Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Turkish Grand National Assembly, among others.

The Congressional Study Group on Turkey also conducts an annual U.S.-Turkey seminar, which brings together American and Turkish lawmakers to discuss current issues pertinent to the bilateral relationship. The fifth annual U.S.-Turkey seminar took place at the end of August 2009 in Ankara and Istanbul, Turkey, and the 2010 annual U.S.-Turkey seminar is slated to take place this summer in Washington and in Chicago. Discussion topics will examine current issues in Turkish-American relations, such as the Strategic Cooperation Framework on Trade, the Middle East peace process, and energy security. The study group will also take this opportunity to inform the visiting parliamentarians about the 2010 mid term elections in the United States via meetings with journalists, think-tank representatives, and policymakers.

In the past, the Congressional Study Group on Turkey continued to receive a generous funding boost from the German Marshall Fund of the United States and a group of corporate sponsors making up its Business Advisory Council. The Study Group's current Business Advisory Council members include Eli Lilly and the Turkish-American Business Council.

The Association also organizes and administers the Congressional Study Group on Japan. Founded in 1993 in cooperation with the East-West Center in Hawaii, the Congressional Study Group on Japan brings together Members of the U.S. Congress and members of the Japanese Diet for a series of discussions covering issues of mutual concern. A group of current Members of Congress chair the study group in a bipartisan manner. In the House of Representatives, Congressman JIM McDERMOTT of Washington and Congresswoman SHELLEY MOORE CAPITO of West Virginia serve as co-chairs. In the Senate, Senators JIM WEBB of Virginia and LISA MURKOWSKI of Alaska take an active role in study group programming. The Congressional Study Group on Japan is funded by the Japan-U.S. Friendship Commission.

Finally, last year the association launched a new program called the Trilateral Renewable Energy Roundtable for legislators from Germany, India and the United States. Together with the Alliance for U.S. India Business, the Bertelsmann Foundation, the Robert Bosch Foundation and TERI North America, we brought together German, Indian and American lawmakers in Washington, DC, for a series of discussions on renewable energy solutions and ways of cooperation in a trilateral framework. We aim to replicate this successful dialogue in the near future, possibly involving Japanese lawmakers in the project.

The Congressional Study Groups on Germany, Turkey, and Japan, as well as the Trilateral Roundtable, demonstrate the significant role that the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress plays in assisting current Members in maintaining a strong dialogue and personal relationships with their counterparts around the globe. We are very proud of the work that is done by the association to keep these study groups as vital programs in the association, and I hope that all of you will look forward to further participation in them.

Mr. RHODES. Thank you, Connie.

The Study Groups are very important and they are very enjoyable. Congress to Campus is a very viable program and I hope more of you will take advantage of it. The gentleman from Kansas and I are living proof that a bipartisan approach to Congress to Campus can be survived.

Mr. Slattery is going to deliver a report on our election monitoring expedition to Iraq. Mr. Slattery is within 2 weeks of losing his exalted position as the immediate past president of this association, but I hope that that does not mean you're going to diminish your activities.

Mr. SLATTERY. Thank you, President Rhodes, for the opportunity to report on the International Election Monitors Institute and its March mission to Iraq. I also want to thank you, Jay, for your dedicated service as president of this association. You have done a terrific job and we all appreciate it. We know the time commitment that you have made to making this association more vital and more actively involved in all the projects we're involved in.

I also want to congratulate my chairman, Bill Gray. It was always an honor and a pleasure to serve with you on the Budget Committee. As I look back on those days, I can't help but recall with some fondness our intense debates around deficits at that time that we were trying to get under $200 billion. Chairman Gray, you did a great job and it was an honor to serve with you.

I want to also join those who have already previously recognized our friend, former Leader Bob Michel, who is really one of the true patriots to have served in this body. What an honor to have known and worked with you during those years and to continue our friendship. Bob Michel, terrific. It's great to see you here today.

It was an honor to travel to Iraq and participate in this project. As you have mentioned, Jay, the International Election Monitors Institute was created in 2005, under the leadership of our good friend, Jack Buechner, when he was president of the association. It is a joint project of the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress, the Association of Former Members of the European Parliament, and the Canadian Association of Former Parliamentarians. In addition to conducting annual workshops for former legislators to train them for election monitoring missions, the International Election Monitors Institute has sent delegations to places like Morocco and Ukraine. Our most recent mission was our most ambitious. We sent six former legislators to observe the March parliamentary elections in Iraq.

Our team was invited to monitor this election by the Independent High Electoral Commission of Iraq. Six former legislators from the United States, Canada, Sweden, and the United Kingdom, including former Congressman Scott Klug and myself, traveled to Iraq to witness these elections.

On March 7, 2010, the brave people of Iraq gave the world another inspirational example of their commitment to freedom and democracy. This was a pivotal election, with more than 300 accredited political entities, more than 80 having candidates competing in the election. There were 6,292 candidates competing for 325 seats. Nearly 300,000 poll workers staffed 52,000 polling stations in 8,600 polling centers. In addition, there were 314 out-of-country voting precincts located in 16 countries.

To get an overall idea of what was happening during the elections, we met with people from all sides of the political spectrum. We spoke to people from several election-oriented NGOs, members of the international community, the Iraqi High Election Commission staff, political parties, and people at special needs polling stations.

With the world's attention on Iraq for these elections, many Iraqi people were ready, inspired, and really excited to go to the polls. To me and our team's amazement, Iraqi citizens made it to the polls even with the explosion of nearly 50 bombs in Baghdad by noon on election day. I have monitored elections in other troubled countries, including the Nicaraguan election in 1990 and the Orange Revolution in Ukraine in 2004, but I have never seen security at the level it was in Iraq. My two-person team was accompanied by a group of 16 armed guards in five armored vehicles provided by the U.S. Government.

On election day, we visited 25 polling stations. We were welcomed by each person we met. They were obviously happy to see neutral officials monitoring their election. The Iraqis working the polls were passionate about the election. The staffers were well trained in voting policies as well as the fact that an adequate amount of supplies were provided for each voter at the polling stations. There was also a sense of pride and camaraderie among the Iraqis who voted that day. We were happy to see that there was no discrimination based on age, ethnicity, religion, or political parties at the polling stations we visited. In addition, both the Shia and Sunni sects were encouraged to vote by their leaders, rather than boycott the election as they had been instructed to do in previous elections.

Let there be no mistake. Iraq has a long way to go in developing a western style democracy where the threat of death is not associated with active political participation. And while there was no conclusive outcome on election day with no one party winning more than 40 percent of the vote, we believe that this election was a giant step forward. Nearly 60 percent of registered voters voted in a free, democratic election, in spite of the violence. There were, of course, some problems with this election, just like there are issues with every election. But in the final analysis, all of us who observed this election were confident that it mechanically went off as good as could be expected. We are confident that it was a great improvement over the last election, and we are confident that it's a giant step toward that day when America's incredible military personnel can withdraw from this troubled land, which likes to think of itself as the "cradle of civilization," and leave the people of Iraq in the hands of a stable democracy.

Thank you again for the opportunity to serve on this mission and to report on its outcome today.

Mr. RHODES. Thank you, Jim. I appreciate that very, very much. The interesting thing to me about giving people the vote is that they hunger for it, and they are willing to take all kinds of risks to exercise it. My first experience with something like that was in 1970 in Vietnam. Like Jim, I saw what happened in Nicaragua, I saw what happened in Ukraine, I saw what happened in Afghanistan, and when people are given the opportunity to express themselves, they jump at it, and they are excited about it.

I would like to include my formal remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point. I want just simply to put in a pitch for our bipartisan programs of tomorrow. I'm not sure I know what bipartisanship is, but I do know what civility is. And I do know that when we were first elected and when Mr. Mitchell was the leader and Mr. O'Neill was the Speaker, civility was the rule. I would hope that we can return to the days when the Members of this body are civil to each other, even if they do not agree. And so if bipartisanship is not a definable term, I know that we know what civility is.

THE U.S. ASSOCIATION OF FORMER MEMBERS OF CONGRESS, 2010 ANNUAL REPORT TO CONGRESS, JUNE 15, 2010

I. INTRODUCTION

This report outlines the activities of the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress for the period June 2009 through June 2010. Pursuant to the Association's Congressional charter requirement, the Association's President, former Member of Congress John J. Rhodes, III, delivered this report to the Congress on June 15, 2010. The report was preceded by the presentation of the Association's 2010 Distinguished Service Award to former Member of Congress William H. Gray. The inscription read:

The 2010 Distinguished Service Award is presented by the United States Association of Former Members of Congress to Chairman William Herbert Gray, III for his lifetime of exceptional public service. Both in and out of Congress, Minister Bill Gray has demonstrated his tremendous dedication to civil rights, fairness and equality. Representing the State of Pennsylvania with great distinction, he served as the first African-American Majority Whip and the first African-American Chairman of the House Budget Committee. His leadership helped young Americans obtain the dream of a college education, his perseverance contributed to the fall of Apartheid, and his humanity brought relief to the people of Haiti. Congressman Bill Gray is an inspiration to us all and his former colleagues from both sides of the political aisle salute him.—WASHINGTON, DC June 15, 2010.

The Association also presented to its outgoing President the following plaque in appreciation for his 2 years of service: Presented to The Honorable John J. Rhodes, III in recognition and appreciation of his strong leadership as President of the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress. His tremendous enthusiasm and effectiveness will always be remembered by his grateful colleagues.—Washington DC, June 15, 2010.

II. GENERAL OVERVIEW ABOUT ASSOCIATION

Mr. Rhodes: Let me take this opportunity to also congratulate Bill Gray on this well-deserved honor. You are an inspiration to us all and we thank you for your many years of distinguished public service.

As President of this organization, it is now my duty to report to the Congress about the activities of the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress since our last annual meeting in June of 2009.

Our Association is nonpartisan. It was chartered by Congress in 1983. The purpose of the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress is to promote public service and strengthen democracy, abroad and in the United States. About 600 former Senators and Representatives belong to the Association. Republicans, Democrats and Independents are united in this organization in their desire to teach about Congress and the importance of representative democracy. We receive no funding from the Congress. All the activities which we are about to describe are financed either via membership dues, program-specific grants and sponsors, or via our fundraising dinner. Our finances are sound, our projects fully funded, and our 2009 audit by an outside accountant came back with a clean bill of financial health.

We again have had a very successful, active, and rewarding year. We have continued our work serving as a liaison between the current Congress and legislatures overseas; we have created partnerships with highly respected institutions in the area of democracy building and election monitoring; we have developed new projects, which we are in the process of expanding, including our webcasting civics education program, and we again sent dozens of bipartisan teams of former Members of Congress to university campuses here in the United States and abroad as part of our Congress to Campus Program.

III. ASSOCIATION DOMESTIC PROGRAMS

a. Conference on Bipartisanship

We were incorporated on June 18th, 1970, almost 40 years ago to the day. Let me quote from our original by-laws as they describe the purpose for which the Association was created: purposes include the promotion of the cause of good government at the national and international level by strengthening and improving representative government, by teaching about our system of government, and by sending delegations to help countries as they develop democratic systems of government.

You will find that all the programs we have initiated meet one or more of the goals outlined in our bylaws. For example, tomorrow we will host a one-day conference focused on the issue of bipartisanship. The conference is a joint project with the National Archives and the Bipartisan Policy Center. Three different panels will examine our current political discourse, how bipartisanship—or the lack thereof—has influenced our political decision making, the way our media influences this nation's political climate, and what concrete steps we might be able to take to foster a more civil relationship across the aisle. Panelists and speakers include current Members such as Senator Ron Wyden, and former Members such as Speaker Tom Foley. The media is represented, for example by Judy Woodruff and Jackie Calmes. This will be an outstanding conference and it is a good example of the type of contribution former Members can make to the issues that affect us all.

Our founders 40 years ago envisioned former Members teaching about Congress and encouraging public service. They were hoping that former Members could inspire the next generation of America's leaders. No program of ours does a better job implementing that vision than the Congress to Campus Program. Established many years ago as a way to reach college students, it has since grown to also bring former Members into the high school civic education classroom as well as connecting with students as young as middle school age.

We continue to work with the Stennis Center for Public Service, but all administration of this great program is now done in-house by Association staff. I will now yield to a former President of our Association, Matt McHugh of New York, who co-chairs the Congress to Campus Program.

b. Congress to Campus Program

Mr. McHugh: Thank you, Jay, for the opportunity to report on this outstanding program. As you indicated, the Congress to Campus Program has been administered entirely by the Association in cooperation with the Stennis Center for three years now. During that time, the program has experienced marked growth and has expanded to include community colleges. As most of you know, this is the Association's flagship program for its members. It sends bipartisan teams of former Members to colleges, universities and high schools across the country to educate the next generation of leaders on the importance of civic engagement. The participating students benefit from the interaction with our Association members, whose knowledge and experience are a unique resource. Our members also benefit through their continued involvement in public service, and the ability to engage young people on issues that are important to them.

During each visit, our bipartisan team conducts classes, meets individually with students and faculty, speaks to campus media, participates in both campus and community forums, and meets with local citizens. Institutions are encouraged to market the visit to the entire campus community, not just to those students majoring in political science, history or government. Over the course of two and a half days, hundreds of students are exposed to the former Members' message regarding the significance of public service.

The program has made both domestic and international visits this academic year, including two separate visits to campuses in the United Kingdom. During the 2009-2010 academic year, the program has made 22 campus visits, including visits to the United States Naval Academy, Boise State University in Idaho, Waubesa Community College in Sugar Grove, Illinois, Cabrini College in Radnor, Pennsylvania, and Miami University Hamilton in Ohio.

More than 35 former Members participated, and I want to thank all of you who took time from your busy schedules to do so. I also want to encourage those who have not yet had the opportunity to seriously consider doing so. It is truly a great way to continue your public service after Congress.

I would also like to extend our thanks to the faculty, staff members and students who worked so diligently on each visit. Without their hard work, these visits would not have been possible. We rely heavily on the universities to take the lead in coordinating logistics related to each visit, and appreciate the time they devote to ensuring that their students receive the full benefit of the program.

We have continued our relationship with the Stennis Center for Public Service in the administration of the program, and we owe a special debt of gratitude to Tracy Fine of our staff and to Brother Rogers of the Stennis Center for their fine work. Our staffs work very closely together to make the program such a success and we also appreciate the continuing financial support we receive from the Stennis Center. We look forward to our continuing association in the years ahead.

In addition to the expansion of the program to community colleges, and with the help of a grant from the U.S. Department of Education, the program has also commenced a concerted effort in partnership with the University of Central Florida and the Lou Frey Institute of Politics and Government, to reach out to high school students via a series of webcasts. These programs focus on specific topics related to Congress and the legislative process, and are designed as a tool for teachers to showcase these topics and encourage involvement in government. During the fall and spring, the program was piloted to high schools in Florida and around the country. The broadcasts were taped and streamed live with an in-studio audience of high schools students in Washington as part of the Congressional Youth Leadership Council. We want to thank the U.S. Department of Education, the University of Central Florida, the Lou Frey Institute of Politics and Government, George Washington University School of Media and Public Affairs, and the Congressional Youth Leadership Council for their support of this great program. In the 2010–2011 academic year, the project will continue to reach out to high school students. While these “virtual” visits cannot replace the person-to-person experience of a traditional Congress to Campus visit, they can play an important supplemental role in teaching about representative democracy at the high school level.

We have also continued our working relationship with the People to People Ambassador Program that brings young people to our nation’s capital for a week of events centered on the concepts of character and leadership. This year the Association sent Former Members to 30 different speaking engagements in this area and reached hundreds of students via these appearances. These students are younger than those who participate in Congress to Campus activities, but they have already demonstrated a commitment to the ideals that Congress to Campus seeks to promote. The Association’s involvement in this program allows our members living in the Washington area to speak to these younger students on the importance of public service and to answer their many questions about our country and its government. A number of our members continue to work full time, and the People to People engagements allow them to continue their public service in this way. The events are typically held in the early morning at suburban locations, and I want to thank my colleagues, especially Orval Hansen, Jack Buechner, and Martin Frost who have participated in this program regularly over the past year.

Finally, I want to say again how grateful we are to all of those who have made the Congress to Campus Program such a success and to strongly encourage all of my friends and colleagues to participate in the program, either by making a visit to a school, or by recommending a school to host the program. As you know, a democracy can prosper only if its citizens are both informed and engaged, and as former legislators we have a particular opportunity and responsibility to encourage such involvement. This program gives us the chance to do so, particularly with our young people. Thank you.

c. Political Rules of the Road

Mr. Rhodes: One of the lessons we have learned from interacting with America’s college students, is that there is a void of real-life experience and advice when it comes to civic education textbooks. To fill that void former Member of Congress Lou Frey of Florida collected the words of wisdom our membership had to offer and edited two books we have since published. The first, Inside the House—Former Members reveal how Congress really works—was published several years ago and is being used by political science professors across the country. This past summer, we published a follow-up volume entitled Political Rules of the Road. This book focuses on some of the rules of the road we all have learned during our political lives, and I thank the many former Members who took the time and submitted contributions for this terrific collection. We have over 500 rules by almost 200 former and current Members as well as several U.S. Presidents! The book has received quite some attention; as a matter of fact Lou Frey did a call-in show on C-Span late last year. Please visit our website at www.usafmc.org for more information about ordering either one of these publications.

d. Statesmanship Award Dinner

None of these projects would be possible without funding. We do not receive a single taxpayer dollar from the Congress for our organization. All programs are self-financed via membership dues, grants, contributions and our annual fundraising dinner. We have taken the occasion of the fundraiser to recognize former or current Members of Congress who have inspired others through their leadership or statesmanship. Our 2010 Statesmanship Award Honoree was Secretary of Transportation Ray LaHood. Early on we decided to dedicate our 40th anniversary year to the theme of bipartisanship. It was therefore a very easy decision to recognize Secretary LaHood for his many years in the Congress and in the current administration as a public servant who strives to reach across the aisle, create dialogue, and work with others regardless of their political persuasion. The dinner was a rousing success and we are so pleased that we had a chance to recognize Secretary LaHood for the good work he did in the Congress and the good work he is doing as Secretary of Transportation.

e. Charitable Golf Tournament

Two years ago we took a 35-year-old tradition—our annual golf tournament which pits

Republicans against Democrats—and gave it a new and much bigger mission: we converted it into a charitable golf tournament to aid severely wounded vets returning from Afghanistan and Iraq. Our beneficiary, the Wounded Warrior Project of Disabled Sports USA, is as impressive and remarkable an organization as you are likely to find anywhere in this country. They use sports to help our wounded veterans readjust to life after a severe injury, they involve the entire family in the sport, and they take care of all the equipment and training. We held the third golf tournament yesterday and between the three tournaments we have raised almost $200,000 for this outstanding organization. We are very proud of this new focus for our organization and hope to be able to support our wounded heroes for many years to come.

IV. ASSOCIATION INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS

a. China Delegation

According to our bylaws and articles of incorporation, we are tasked with promoting representative democracy at home and abroad. We therefore have created a number of programs with an international outreach.

For example, earlier this year I was privileged to lead a delegation of former Members of Congress to China. Our bipartisan group had a number of meetings in Beijing as well as in Shanghai. The purpose of the trip was to learn about China firsthand, engage Chinese officials in a frank dialogue, shed some light on current U.S. politics and foreign policy, and gain knowledge about U.S.-Chinese trade relations from U.S. corporate representatives in Asia. To conduct this mission we partnered with the China Association For International Friendly Contact and the China U.S. Exchange Foundation. Our discussion partners included the Vice Chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, the Assistant Minister of Commerce, and the Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs. In addition, we met with a number of Chinese university students, Chinese cultural representatives, and the Deputy Governor of China’s central bank. Our talks were frank and productive, we learned an awful lot and were able to dispel some myths. Most importantly, we established an avenue for an exchange of views and ideas. This was a very successful trip and we are planning a followup in the fall.

Another example of our international outreach is the work we do via the International Election Monitors Institute. Created in 2005 under the leadership of our then-President Jack Buechner, the IEMI is a collaborative effort administered in conjunction with our Canadian and European Union sister organizations. IEMI takes former legislators from the United States, Canada and Europe and trains them in proper election monitoring techniques and a code of conduct. To this end we have been able to put together a two-day training course which we’ve now administered numerous times in Ottawa. The course, as well as a host of other achievements for the Institute, was made possible via a three-year grant from the Canadian International Development Agency. Dozens of U.S., Canadian, and European former legislators have gone through the training and are now well versed in the actual set of responsibilities and challenges that come with election observation. Our most recent mission was also our most ambitious undertaking: we were one of only two organizations with U.S. election monitors in Iraq for that country’s March parliamentary elections. Former Member of Congress Jim Slatery was in Baghdad as an IEMI election observer and will report on this project.

b. IEMI Iraq Election Monitoring Mission

Mr. Slattery: Thank you, Jay, for the opportunity to report on the International Election Monitors Institute and its March mission to Iraq. It was an honor to be able to travel to Iraq and participate in this endeavor and to be part of such an important moment for democracies around the world.

As you mentioned, the IEMI was created in 2005 under the leadership of our good friend Jack Buechner, when he was President of our Association. It is a joint project of the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress, the Association of Former Members of the European Parliament, and the Canadian Association of Former Parliamentarians. In addition to conducting multiple annual workshops for former legislators to train them for election monitoring missions, IEMI has sent delegations to places such as Morocco and Ukraine. Our most recent mission was arguable our most ambitious, when we sent six former legislators to observe the March parliamentary elections in Iraq.

A team from the IEMI was invited to visit Iraq and monitor the 2010 elections by the Independent High Electoral Commission of Iraq. Six former legislators from the United States, Canada, Sweden, and the United Kingdom, including myself, traveled to Iraq to witness the elections.

On March 7, 2010, I had the opportunity to observe the elections in Iraq and see how the brave people of that country gave the world another inspirational example of their commitment to democracy. This year was a pivotal election year with over 300 accredited political entities, more than 80 having candidates competing in this election. There were 6,292 candidates competing for 325 seats. Nearly 300,000 poll workers staffed 52,000 polling stations in 8,600 polling centers. In addition, there were 314 out-of-country voting precincts located in 16 countries.

In order to get an overall idea of what exactly was happening during the elections, we met with people from all sides of the spectrum. We spoke to people from several election-oriented NGOs, members of the international community, IHEC staff, political parties, and people at special needs polling stations.

With the world's attention on Iraq for these elections, many Iraqi people were ready, inspired and excited to go to the polls. To me and my team's amazement, Iraqi citizens still made it to the polls even with the explosion of nearly 50 bombs in Baghdad by noon on Election Day. I have monitored elections in other troubled countries, including the Nicaraguan election in 1990 and the Ukrainian election in 2004, but I have never seen security at the level it was in Iraq. My two-person team was accompanied by a group of 16 armed guards in 5 armored vehicles, provided by the U.S. Government.

On Election Day, we visited 25 polling stations. We were welcomed by each person we met. They were happy to know that there were neutral officials coming to monitor the elections. The Iraqis working the polls were passionate about these elections. All of the staffers were well trained in voting policies and procedures. Instructions on the voting process as well as an adequate amount of supplies were provided for each voter at the polling stations. There was also a sense of pride and camaraderie amongst the Iraqis who voted that day. People sat in voting centers sharing food and drink, celebrating this noteworthy day. We were happy to see that there was no discrimination between age, ethnicity, religion, or political parties at the polling stations we visited. In addition, both the Shia and Sunni sects were encouraged to vote by their leaders, rather than boycott the election as they had been instructed to do in previous elections.

Let there be no mistake. Iraq has a long way to go in developing a Western style democracy where the threat of death is not associated with active political participation. And while there was no conclusive outcome on Election Day with no one party winning more than 40 percent of the vote, we believe that this election was a big step forward. Nearly 60 percent of registered voters voted in a legitimate, democratic election. There were, of course, some problems with this election—just like there are issues with every other election that takes place in any country on this planet. For example, we found that there is a need for a definite voter list. The lack thereof continues to adversely affect citizens' attitudes toward democracy and their belief in the legitimacy of the process. Another issue was that the Council of Representatives did not complete the revisions to the electoral law until December 6, 2009, barely three months before election day. However, domestic monitoring organizations and nearly all Iraqi officials with whom we met believed the March election was a major improvement on the 2005 election.

We hope this election is another giant step toward that day when America's incredible military personnel can withdraw from this troubled land, which likes to think of itself as the "Cradle of Civilization", and leave the people of Iraq in the hands of a stable democracy. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to serve on this mission and to report on its outcome today.

c. House Democracy Partnership project

Mr. Rhodes: For the past year, we have been working in conjunction with current Members on democracy building and legislative strengthening projects abroad. Specifically, the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress has had the privilege to support the important work of the House Democracy Partnership.

HDP is an undertaking by the House of Representatives to strengthen democratic institutions by assisting parliaments in emerging democracies. One of the objectives of HDP is to provide expert advice to members and staff of the parliaments of partner countries. HDP is chaired by David Price of North Carolina and David Dreier of California. It is an extension of the great work begun by Martin Frost and Gerry Solomon as part of the Frost-Solomon Task Force. We are very pleased to be able to play an important role in this outstanding project.

Via a grant by the U.S. Agency for International Development, bipartisan teams of former Members have travelled to Kenya, Georgia, and Poland. In addition, we have assisted with the work of a team of former Congressional Staff in Haiti. The missions are issue-specific, have an intense and active program, and give former Members the opportunity to share some of their experiences with current legislators in parliaments overseas. The Georgia mission, for example, had the very specific focus of talking about effective civilian control of the military and an appropriate role for Parliament in the setting, funding and oversight of defense policy. This mission was led by former Member Martin Lancaster and included former Members Heather Wilson, Joel Hefley and Pete Geren. The Kenya mission was led by former Member Martin Frost and included former Members Barbara Kennelly, Connie Morella and Phil English. The delegation had meetings with the Ministers of Foreign Affairs, Justice, Agriculture, and Water; the Speaker of Parliament; the Parliamentary Reform Caucus; Former Members of Parliament; and leaders of the major political parties. They discussed challenges and coalition building with Civil Society leaders, including Transparency International, the Law Society of Kenya, SUNY, and Youth movement organizations. The mission to Poland included former Member Martin Frost and coincided with the 20th anniversary commemoration of the Frost-Solomon Task Force working with the Polish legislature. During this mission, the delegation focused on organizing a training program for legislative staff. Clearly former Members can play an important and productive role in this type of legislative strengthening project. We thank David Price and David Dreier for including us in their work and we hope that we will be allowed to contribute further in the future.

In addition to the international work which I just highlighted, our Association also focuses on creating a dialogue involving current Members of Congress and their colleagues in legislatures abroad. Mainly we achieve this objective via several Congressional Study Groups involving Germany, Turkey, and Japan. We have arranged over 500 special events at the U.S. Capitol for international delegations from over 80 countries and the European Parliament, hosted meetings for individual legislators and for parliamentary staff, and organized over 50 foreign policy seminars in about a dozen countries involving more than 1,500 former and current legislators. Former Member of Congress Connie Morella will report on the activities of our Congressional Study Groups.

d. Congressional Study Groups

Ms. Morella: Thank you, Jay. The U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress is pleased to oversee and administer the Congressional Study Groups on Germany, Turkey and Japan, which create invaluable opportunities for current Members of Congress to engage with their counterparts in the legislative branches of those countries.

The Congressional Study Group on Germany is the Association's flagship international program, and is the largest and most active parliamentary exchange program involving the U.S. Congress and the legislature of another country. Since its inception almost 30 years ago, the Study Group has offered lawmakers a unique forum to discuss potential avenues of cooperation on issues ranging from the current economic global crisis to NATO's role in Afghanistan. A group of current Members of Congress chair the Study Group in a bipartisan manner. In the House of Representatives, Congressman Russ Carnahan of Missouri serves as the Chairman and Congressman Phil Gingrey of Georgia serves as the Vice Chairman. In the Senate, Senators Evan Bayh (D-IN) and Jeff Sessions (R-AL) serve as Co-Chairs.

The Study Group on Germany's programming consists of three pillars: the Distinguished Visitors Program, which offers monthly roundtable discussions on Capitol Hill for Members of Congress featuring visiting dignitaries from Germany; Annual Seminars which meet in Germany and the United States on a rotating basis; and a senior Congressional Staff Study Tour to Germany. Recent Capitol Hill discussion partners include: the German Federal Minister of Economy and Technology, Rainer Brudele; Minister-President of Hessen, Roland Koch; and Minister-President of Lower Saxony, Christian Wulff.

The highlight of each programming year is the Annual Congress-Bundestag Seminar, which brings together Members of the U.S. Congress with their counterparts in the German Bundestag for in-depth discussions about issues that affect the transatlantic relationship. In addition to current and former lawmakers from the United States and Germany, representatives from the U.S. State Department, the German Foreign Ministry, and the business and academic community also participate. Discussion topics are dictated by current events and issues influencing U.S.-German relations. The 27th Annual Congress-Bundestag took place the second week of May in Washington, DC and St. Louis, MO. Seminar sessions examined prospects for peace in the Middle East, mutual national security risks as well as outlook on the 2010 Mid-term elections. The 2010 Senior Congressional Staff Study Tour to Germany took place at the end of March bringing ten House Chiefs of Staff to Berlin and Cologne.

Since its creation, the Congressional Study Group on Germany has received generous grants from the German Marshall Fund of the United States. The Association would like to thank GMF's President, Craig Kennedy, for his support and trust in the Study Group. Additional funding to assist with administrative expenses is received from a group of organizations that make up the Study Group's Business Advisory Council. This council is chaired by former Member of Congress Tom Coleman of Missouri, who served as the Chairman of the Congressional Study Group on Germany in the House in 1989. Current Business Advisory Council Members are: Airbus, Allianz, BASF, Daimler, Deutsche Telekom, DHL, Eli Lilly, Fresenius Inc., Lufthansa, RGIT and Volkswagen.

The Congressional Study Group on Turkey was established in 2005, and it has quickly become a major focus for the Former Members Association. The Study Group offers lawmakers a unique educational forum to examine issues ranging from the current economic global crisis to cooperation in the Middle East peace process. Taking the successful and long-running Congressional Study Group on Germany as a model, the Congressional Study Group on Turkey has grown into a highly relevant and productive program for American and Turkish legislators. The Study Group is currently active in the House of Representatives, and is co-chaired by Congressman Steve Cohen of Tennessee and Congresswoman Virginia Foxx of North Carolina. Congressman Ed Whitfield of Kentucky remains active in the Study Group as Immediate Past Chair.

Similar to the Study Group on Germany, the Congressional Study Group on Turkey hosts roundtable discussions on Capitol Hill for Members of Congress featuring visiting dignitaries from Turkey and U.S. Administration officials as part of its Distinguished Visitors Program. The Study Group has recently hosted: the Turkish Minister of Foreign Affairs, Ambassador Ahmet Davutoglu; and Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Turkish Grand National Assembly, MP Murat Mercan.

The Congressional Study Group on Turkey also conducts an annual U.S.-Turkey Seminar, which brings together American and Turkish lawmakers to discuss current issues pertinent to the bilateral relationship. The 5th Annual U.S.-Turkey Seminar took place at the end of August 2009 in Ankara and Istanbul, Turkey, and the 2010 Annual U.S.-Turkey Seminar is slated to take place this summer in Washington, DC and Chicago, IL.

Discussion topics will examine current issues in Turkish-American relations, such as the Strategic Cooperation Framework on Trade, the Middle East peace process and energy security. The Study Group will also take this opportunity to inform the visiting parliamentarians about the 2010 mid-term elections in the United States via meetings with journalists, think-tank representatives and policy makers. In the past year, the Congressional Study Group on Turkey continued to receive a generous funding from the German Marshall Fund of the United States, and a group of corporate sponsors making up its Business Advisory Council. The Study Group's current Business Advisory Council members include Eli Lilly and the Turkish-American Business Council.

The Association also organizes and administers the Congressional Study Group on Japan. Founded in 1993 in cooperation with the East-West Center in Hawaii, the Congressional Study Group on Japan brings together Members of the U.S. Congress and Members of the Japanese Diet for a series of discussions covering issues of mutual concern. A group of current Members of Congress chair the Study Group in a bipartisan manner. In the House of Representatives, Congressman Jim McDermott of Washington and Congresswoman Shelley Moore Capito of West Virginia serve as co-Chairs. In the Senate, Senators Jim Webb of Virginia and Lisa Murkowski of Alaska take an active role in Study Group programming. The Congressional Study Group on Japan is funded by the Japan-U.S. Friendship Commission.

Last year, the Association launched a new program called the Trilateral Renewable Energy Roundtable for legislators from Germany, India and the United States. Together with the Alliance for U.S. India Business, the Bertelsmann Foundation, the Robert Bosch Foundation and TERI North America, we brought together German, Indian and American lawmakers in Washington, DC for a series of discussions on renewable energy solutions and ways of cooperation in a trilateral framework. We aim to replicate this highly successful dialogue in the near future, possibly involving Japanese lawmakers in the project.

The Congressional Study Groups on Germany, Turkey and Japan, as well as the Trilateral Roundtable demonstrate the significant role that the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress plays in assisting current Members in maintaining a strong dialogue and personal relationships with their counterparts around the globe. We are very proud of the work we do to keep these Study Groups as vital programs in the Association, and I look forward to being an active participant in Study Group activities for many more years to come. Thank you.

e. Middle East Fellows Program

Mr. Rhodes: The Study Groups do important work and are another example of how former Members can assist current Members in their international outreach.

I wish to highlight one more international project which we initiated this year and hope to replicate in the future. Just last month our Association hosted six Legislative Fellows from the Middle East here in DC. In partnership with an organization called Legacy International, we implemented a small grant from the U.S. Department of State. Via this program we brought a group of young professionals from the Middle East to Washington for one month. The group came from Kuwait and Oman and included lawyers, journalists and government employees. Each fellow—and I should highlight that there were two female fellows—was paired up with a former Member of Congress to serve as a mentor. I thank our six colleagues who went above and beyond in terms of taking their visitor under their wings. In addition to the time spent with the former Members, each fellow spent three weeks on Capitol Hill as a visiting fellow in Congressional offices. Let me also thank the six current Members of Congress who participated in this project. We are hoping to bring a second and larger group of Middle East Fellows to DC in the fall, and then possibly send a former Members delegation to the Middle East as a follow up visit. This program clearly falls within our goal of strengthening ties via people-to-people interaction and dialogue.

V. CONCLUSION

a. In Memoriam

It is now my sad duty to inform the House of those former and current Members who passed away since our last report. We honored them via a memorial breakfast for which Speaker Pelosi joined us earlier today. It was a fitting commemoration of the service these Members gave to our country. They are:

Ike Andrews of North Carolina
William Avery of Kansas
Henry Bellmon of Oklahoma
James Bromwell of Iowa
Frank Coffin of Maine
Bob Davis of Michigan
Paul Fino of New York
Robert Franks of New Jersey
Thomas Gill of Hawaii
Clifford Hansen of Wyoming
Cecil Heftel of Hawaii
Bill Hefner of North Carolina
Jay Johnson of Wisconsin

John Murtha of Pennsylvania
Stanford Parris of Virginia
John Rarick of Louisiana
David Treen of Louisiana
Stewart Udall of Arizona
Charlie Wilson of Texas

I ask all of you, including the visitors in the gallery, to rise for a moment of silence as we pay our respects to their memory.

Before we conclude, let me welcome to Washington several former Members of the Canadian Parliament who have joined us as our guests. Leo Duguay is my counterpart in the Canadian Association of Former Parliamentarians and is leading a delegation of his colleagues as part of our continued excellent relations with our neighbors from the north. Also with us are four former Members of the Ontario legislature, led by Steven Gilchrist. To you also a warm welcome and our thanks for joining us again this year. Last, but certainly not least, we are so pleased that an old friend of this Association has again made the long trip from the UK to join us. Richard Balfe serves in the Executive of the European Union Former Members Association and it is always wonderful to see you! We are honored that you have joined us for our annual meeting.

I would be remiss if I did not thank the other members of our Association's Executive Committee: our Vice President, Dennis Hertel; our Treasurer, Connie Morella; our Secretary, Barbara Kennelly, and our Immediate Past President, Jim Slattery. You all have made this Association a stronger and better organization than it has ever been and I thank you for all your time and energy. Your counsel was invaluable to me during these two years as President.

Former Member Dennis Hertel will succeed me as President starting July 1st. He will have a great group of former Members to work with on the Executive Committee level and we are pleased to announce that former Member of Congress Jim Kolbe will become a new officer with the Former Members Association. In addition, I wish to thank our Board of Directors and our counselors for their commitment to our Association. Your service is valued and appreciated! As of July 1st our newest board member will be former Member of Congress Scott Klug.

To administer all these programs takes a staff of dedicated and enthusiastic professionals. We have five full-time employees and we appreciate their hard work. They are:

Esra Alemdar, Program Officer
Bryan Corder, Member Services Manager
Tracy Fine, Democracy Officer
Sudha David-Wilp, International Programs Director

Pete Weichlein, Executive Director

Closing Remarks. That concludes the 40th Report to Congress by the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress. We thank the Congress, Majority Leader Hoyer, and Minority Leader Boehner for giving us the opportunity to report again this year on the activities of our organization and we look forward to another active and productive year. Thank you.

Mr. HERTEL. I thank the gentleman from Arizona and the president of our association for all his service. I think it could be summarized best by Speaker PELOSI, coming this morning to our memorial service for those Members who have died in this last year in talking about Jay Rhodes and how much she respected him and how she hopes he will continue in service of this organization and in service of our country. Those were the remarks of Speaker PELOSI this morning.

I want to thank Lorraine Miller, the Clerk of the House, for being with us again and for hosting us and for spending all this time with us. We are honored to have you here. Thank you very much, Madam Clerk. I want to thank all of the guests of our whip and Budget chairman, Bill Gray, who received our Distinguished Service Award. We are very honored that you all took the time to come. You are just as proud of him as we are. You know how much time it took from his community but especially his family.

I want to recognize his wife, Andrea; their three sons, Bill, Justin and Andrew, up in the gallery; their daughter-in-law, Jennifer; and two grandchildren, Sabrina and Aidan, here today. Thank you very much for coming. We are so proud of him and for all the time he gave on behalf of us taken from you.

Finally, I want to thank Richard Balfe from the European Union Association of Former Members; Steven Gilchrist who is leading a delegation of the Ontario legislature; and lastly Leo Duguay, my counterpart and the president of the Canadian Association of Former Parliamentarians, and Don Boudria and Francis LeBlanc for taking the time to join with us. All of the public service that all of you are accomplishing for us on the international level, we very much appreciate; and I want to thank all of our Members here for all their service.

We are adjourned.

Accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 3 minutes a.m.), the House continued in recess.

□ 1130

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. BLUMENAUER) at 11 o'clock and 30 minutes a.m.

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS HAD DURING RECESS

Ms. BERKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings had during the recess be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and that all Members and former Members who spoke during the recess have the privilege of revising and extending their remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

JOBS

(Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to discuss the importance of putting Americans back to work. You know, we cannot overturn and change 8 years of Republican rule with simply a snap of a finger. However, the Democratic Caucus is on its way to restoring this country's economic well-being.

The House passed the Small Business and Infrastructure Jobs Tax Act. The legislation will create 160,000 jobs and extends successful Build America Bonds for schools, roads and bridges. We also passed the Summer Jobs Act which creates 300,000 summer job opportunities for our youth. We have seen an increase in GDP, and we've seen an increase in manufacturing, and we've seen a significant increase in economic indicators. As President Obama said, this is the Nation where anyone with a good idea and the will to work hard can succeed. Dallas, my hometown, is no stranger to good ideas, hard work, or small businesses.

I commend Dallas' small businesses which have created hundreds of jobs, provide valuable goods and services, and help drive our local economy.

I encourage my colleagues in the House and in the Senate to work together to enact policies that creates and saves jobs.

House Democrats are committed to create good American jobs, build a strong foundation for the economy, and work to turn around our Nation's economy.

RECOGNIZING COLLIERVILLE AND HOUSTON HIGH SCHOOLS FROM SHELBY COUNTY, TENNESSEE

(Mrs. BLACKBURN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to praise two outstanding high schools in Tennessee's Seventh Congressional District. Collierville High and Houston High Schools, both in Shelby County, Tennessee, have been named by Newsweek magazine among America's top high schools. Only 6 percent of America's high schools make this list. This is an important accomplishment that comes because of hard and diligent work not just from students but faculty, staff, principals, from parents and from lots of participation from the community.

I congratulate Principals Leisa Justus of Houston and Tim Setterlund of Collierville, along with the faculty and most importantly the students of both schools for all the hard work that has led them to this important achievement.

FLAG BURNING

(Mrs. KIRKPATRICK of Arizona asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. KIRKPATRICK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, yesterday folks across America gathered together to celebrate our national flag. For 233 years now, the Stars and Stripes have been a unique symbol of freedom and democracy across the globe, the representation of all we are and all that we stand for. Millions of young men and women fought and died for their country under that flag, and every day our servicemembers risk their lives in Afghanistan, Iraq and around the world to protect the ideals it represents.

To burn or desecrate it is an insult to those who have made the ultimate sacrifice to keep us safe and to those who helped build our great Nation. It should be illegal, and this Congress should make it illegal by finally passing a constitutional amendment to ban the burning of a U.S. flag. Every day this House begins its work by pledging allegiance to the flag of the United States of America. We need to live up to that pledge.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY, U.S. ARMY

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the United States Army celebrated its 235th birthday. Since the Continental Congress first created the Continental Army to protect and secure our new Nation, men and women have continued to make the ultimate sacrifice in the name of freedom and independence. For three centuries, from the Revolutionary War to D-day and the current global war on terrorism and every day in between, America's soldiers have performed bravely. The American military has achieved the largest number of countries living today in freedom and democracy in the history of the world.

I appreciate firsthand the Army as a 31-year veteran of the Army Reserve and Army Guard myself. Also, my father served in the Army Air Corps as a Flying Tiger in China and India. But more meaningful to me is that I have three sons today serving in the Army National Guard, with my oldest son an Iraq veteran of the field artillery. On this 235th birthday, I extend my appreciation to those who have served or are currently serving and especially to those family and friends of soldiers who paid the ultimate sacrifice in the defense of liberty.

In conclusion, God bless our troops, and we will never forget September the 11th in the global war on terrorism. Happy birthday, U.S. Army.

INTRODUCING THE TEEN PARENTS GRADUATION AND COLLEGE ACT

(Ms. CHU asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. CHU. The author Robin Cook wrote that "education is more than a luxury. It is a responsibility that society owes to itself." Our country far too often neglects this duty. Every year, nearly 750,000 American teens become pregnant. Every year, 70 percent of these new teen mothers drop out of school. Every year, the lack of services to keep low-income parents in school focuses this problem on our Nation's most underprivileged communities.

That's why I have introduced the Teen Parents Graduation and College Act. This bill would fund grants to help teen parents finish high school and college. It would provide tutoring and child care and counseling to help them succeed. It would let teen parents and their children lead better, fuller lives. This basic support is the least we owe our young people. Together we will ensure that the beginning of a new life doesn't mark the end of an education.

ALIX KLEIN'S BAT MITZVAH

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to wish a happy bat mitzvah to a wonderful young lady in my congressional district, Alix Klein. She recently celebrated her bat mitzvah surrounded by family and friends and chose to mark the occasion with more than just a party, but with a concert to benefit those less privileged than she is. Alix's kindness and generosity has made a difference in the lives of the young patients of Alyn Hospital and Rehabilitation Center in Israel. These patients have physical disabilities.

Alix has demonstrated a maturity beyond her years, and she serves as a role model for her fellow teenagers. Alix's selfless contributions will provide much-needed support for these patients and their families in Israel.

MEDICARE PART D DOUGHNUT HOLE IS BEGINNING TO CLOSE

(Mr. WILSON of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to deliver some good news to Medicare participants around the country. This week, seniors who fall into the Medicare part D doughnut hole will begin receiving $250 checks in their mailboxes to help them cover their prescription drug costs. This is one of many benefits for Medicare participants included in the health care reform law that Democrats passed earlier this year.

Across the country, nearly 4 million seniors will be helped by these checks. In my district alone in Ohio, over 9,000 people will receive this benefit. While the doughnut hole will soon be closed completely, seniors will continue to see lower prescription drug costs. Next year, those experiencing a coverage gap will receive a 50 percent discount on their brand-name drugs. I am proud to work hard to improve Medicare for all seniors.

NO NEW ENERGY TAX

(Mr. POSEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. POSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to echo the concerns that I have heard from thousands of my constituents. They tell me that Washington has failed to focus on economic recovery; and you know what, they are right. Last year, the House passed a massive national energy tax known as cap-and-trade, and it's similar to legislation passed in Europe in the 1990s. It cost Europe hundreds of thousands of jobs and made virtually no change or effect whatsoever on their environment. Estimates are that if Washington forces this bill on the American public, it will kill more than 2.5 million more American jobs.

Fortunately, the national energy tax is now stalled in the Senate, and I sure hope it stays there. With unemployment near 10 percent, the last thing America needs is more job-killing legislation and more taxes. America does need to know that Congress is listening to them.

PAY THE DOCTORS FOR TREATING PATIENTS ON MEDICARE

(Ms. BERKLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. BERKLEY. The Republicans in the Senate are once again doing everything they can to destroy Medicare for millions of seniors by blocking legislation that will stop the 21 percent cut in payments to doctors who care for our elderly citizens. They say they are worried about the deficit, and paying the docs will add to the deficit. Excuse me, we're fighting two wars not paid for. We have homeland security needs not paid for. Medicare part D, not paid for.

Not a word from the Senate Republicans. But they are drawing a line on paying the doctors who treat Medicare patients. This is going to add to the deficit. Let's stop playing politics with Medicare, pay the doctors, and provide health care for millions and millions of our senior citizens.

THE U.S. NEEDS A BUDGET

(Mr. SMITH of Nebraska asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, at its most fundamental level, the duty of Congress is to steward the tax revenue. Lately, all Congress has been doing is spending it. Through the first 8 months of the current fiscal year, the Federal Government amassed $941 billion in deficit spending. Every penny of debt accumulated must be paid for by our children and grandchildren. Without a budget, the only spending rule is, there are no rules.

The deadline for the House of Representatives to pass an actual budget has come and passed, and we still have nothing to show the American people. The budget process can be frustrating, but that's what we're here to do, to make the tough decisions. Families, small businesses, cities and States have to put together a budget. Congress must do the same for our country. We need a practical, workable Federal budget which restrains spending and puts us on a path to solvency, economic growth and prosperity.

PAYMENTS TO MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES

(Mr. MURPHY of New York asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MURPHY of New York. Today we're seeing the implementation of one of the things in the health care reform bill: payments of $250 to help our seniors with the doughnut hole coverage. One of the things that's also going on that most Americans don't know about is fundamental reforms with respect to waste and fraud in the Medicare system. Our efforts on that front have been dramatically improved by things that were in the health care bill that was passed earlier this year, giving Medicare the power to do commonsense things that any small business in America would do, do a better job of checking new providers as they come into Medicare, do a better job of putting people on probation and checking up on them in that first year to make sure they are not abusing our system.

There is a rampant problem with waste, fraud and abuse in our Medicare system. The health care bill we passed earlier this year is making steps to bring that into check. Today we had a hearing here in Congress about other things that we can do. And I testified about my legislation to put more tools in the hands of our law enforcement professionals and CMS to cut down on the waste and fraud in Medicare. I look forward to continuing to work on this and making sure that we use the dollars in Medicare to provide health benefits to our seniors, not allow criminals to run rampant.

GEERT WILDERS—CHAMPION OF THE PUBLIC LIBERTY

(Mr. POE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. POE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, free speech is under assault from Islamic terrorists worldwide. They use threats and political correctness to silence anybody who speaks out about their violent beliefs. Dutch lawmaker Geert Wilders made a movie about these Islamic clerics who incite violence in the name of religion. But the Dutch Government is putting Wilders on trial for incitement to hatred. The oppressive Dutch Government says it's irrelevant that the speech in the movie may be true.

You see, there is no freedom of speech in the Netherlands if a person is critical of radical Islam. Freedom of speech is a basic human right. Political speech and religious speech are the most controversial types of all speech. That is why these types of speech should be protected the most. Benjamin Franklin said, "There can be no such thing as public liberty without freedom of speech." Geert Wilders is a champion of the public liberty and the free speech that guarantees that liberty.

And that's just the way it is.

PASS ANNUAL BUDGET

(Mr. DJOU asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DJOU. Mr. Speaker, last month I left the Honolulu City Council for the great honor of entering this Chamber as a Member of the United State House of Representatives. Last week, my former chamber, the Honolulu City Council, passed its annual budget. The budget was $3.5 billion. My position is that the Honolulu City Council budget is too big, increased taxes by too much, and increased government size by far more than the citizens of the city and county of Honolulu could afford. But at least the city and county of Honolulu passed a budget. It was $3.5 billion. The Federal Government will spend that money in about 5 minutes.

Here today in mid-June, the United States Congress still has yet to pass a budget. If the Honolulu City Council, which I just departed, can pass a budget for $3.5 billion, which the Federal Government will spend in just a few minutes, it is the responsibility of our government here in the United States Congress to pass a budget. We are spending far too much money. Even worse than that, we are spending far too much money on programs that are not working. Even worse than that, we have no plans to pay it back. Let us get to work and pass a budget.

ECONOMIC TURNAROUND

(Mr. ALTMIRE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. ALTMIRE. Mr. Speaker, I would ask my friends to take a walk down memory lane and consider where our economy was at the beginning of last year compared to where it is today: 2009 had the biggest single year turnaround this Nation has seen in more than 30 years, going from negative 6 GDP in the first quarter of last year to plus 6 GDP in the last quarter. And we are currently in the midst of our fourth consecutive quarter of strong GDP growth.

We have had positive job growth for six of the past 7 months, and the stock market, which bottomed out at 6500 just before we passed the stimulus, is over 10,000 today. Housing starts are up, consumer confidence is on the rise, the auto industry is coming back, and manufacturers are increasing orders and hiring back thousands of workers.

No, everything is not where we want it to be or even where we need it to be, but things have gotten better, and there can be no doubt that the bold action of this Congress is the reason why.

TWO MONTHS LATE ON PASSING BUDGET

(Mr. BOEHNER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, the House is 2 months late in passing a budget. In that time, unemployment has remained nearly 10 percent, and the national debt has now exceeded $13 trillion. Last week, I gave the President a letter signed by more than 100 top economists from around the country that urges both parties to cut spending now in order to create jobs and boost our economy. Less spending, more jobs, it really is just that simple.

But the President responded Saturday night with a letter asking for another $50 billion in stimulus bailout money. Without specifying where this money would come from, the President asked us to be patient with his administration for its continuing job-killing spending spree.

This money comes from our kids and grandkids who this year are going to get stuck with 43 cents out of every dollar the Federal Government spends. The debt is going to be laid on them.

The American people are shouting at the top of their lungs: Stop, and stop now. They are making their voices heard through YouCut, where more than 830,000 votes have already been cast to cut spending.

And today, on America Speaking Out, PAUL RYAN has posted a plan to cut spending now and to reduce the budget deficit. You can visit AmericaSpeakingOut.com right now and check out these ideas and vote on them in order to cut spending quickly.

FILLING THE DOUGHNUT HOLE

(Ms. WATSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. WATSON. Good news, Mr. Speaker, the first $250 checks have been sent out, 3 weeks ahead of schedule, to about 80,000 people who are already in the doughnut hole. The rest will be mailed at monthly intervals through the year as more part D enrollees, about 4 million in all, hit that gap. The one-time rebate will be sent directly to anyone who falls into the Medicare part D doughnut hole during 2010.

Health care reform will eventually close the doughnut hole completely. Additional checks will be sent to seniors who fall into the doughnut hole every month or so after that, with a total of 4 million seniors receiving these $250 checks in the mail. While the Medicare part D program has helped millions of seniors obtain prescription drug coverage, there will be more.

CONGRESS ISN'T LISTENING

(Mr. NEUGEBAUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NEUGEBAUER. Mr. Speaker, the American people know when they are being ignored. Congress just isn't listening. Unemployment is nearly 10 percent. The national debt is skyrocketing past $13 trillion; and even more spending is coming down the pipe this week. Dependency on the Federal Government is rising at an alarming rate, and the Democrats have failed to even propose a budget.

Our Founding Fathers would not be pleased with this situation, and neither are the American people. That is why I am launching The Empowerment Project. To get America back on track, we must restore our founders' principles of empowerment by having more limited government, increasing personal freedom and responsibility, and having greater choices and opportunity. The Empowerment Project will work to highlight Member initiatives that empower the American people to prosper.

Our Nation cannot thrive if it is built on government dependency. It is time to put America back on the path of empowerment. To learn more about The Empowerment Project, go to my Web site at Randy.house.gov.

CONSUMER CONFIDENCE ON RISE

(Mrs. DAHLKEMPER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mrs. DAHLKEMPER. Mr. Speaker, each month the numbers come in, and the signs are clear: Our economy is growing in the United States.

Consumers agree. Consumer confidence rose to the highest level in more than 2 years this month. I believe our economy is on the rebound largely because we are making the move back to a manufacturing and production economy and away from the paper economy of Wall Street.

Our manufacturing sector is up for the 10th month in a row. Manufacturing has added more than 125,000 jobs this year. Companies like Acutec in Crawford County, a manufacturer of aerospace parts, have been performing well and hiring new employees despite the recession.

A strong economy is one that makes things, produces goods and products that people want to buy here and all over the world. American can-do attitude and entrepreneurship will continue to lead us out of this recession. I am proud to support our American manufacturers, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

GUN RIGHTS

(Mr. REHBERG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. REHBERG. Mr. Speaker, too many people in Washington, D.C. are under the dangerous impression that the Second Amendment is obsolete and unnecessary. If they had their way, only criminals and agents of the State would be armed, while law-abiding Americans would be at their mercy.

While we can stop gun control in Congress, progressives and Washington, D.C. bureaucrats will use every tactic at their disposal to disarm the American public, including banning firearms on public lands.

That is why I have sponsored the Firearms Freedom on Federal Lands Act with Representatives Rob Bishop and Paul Broun. This legislation creates a statutory protection of gun rights, preventing land management agencies from restricting firearms on public lands, as they have done in the past.

The NRA has endorsed this measure, and I hope my colleagues will follow their lead and cosponsor this legislation.

CELEBRATING LIFE OF BARBARA GREENSPUN

(Ms. TITUS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. TITUS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to celebrate the life of Barbara Greenspun whose recent death marks the end of an era in Nevada. With her sad passing, we have lost a remarkable individual who gave so much of herself to our community.

Together, Hank and Barbara Greenspun poured their heart and soul into the Las Vegas Sun, showing a dedication and commitment that would turn the paper into a leading publication. Then moving from behind the scenes to publisher after Hank's death, Barbara built upon his legacy as the paper earned journalism's most prestigious award, the Pulitzer Prize.

Known for her grace and generous spirit, Barbara also committed herself to a number of important causes, including higher education and women's health that touched the lives of so many. While she will be truly missed, her legacy will live on through her remarkable family, the landmark Greenspun building at UNLV, and the continued excellence of the Las Vegas Sun.

CONGRESS IS NOT LISTENING

(Mr. CONAWAY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CONAWAY. Mr. Speaker, an oft-forgotten dictum in Washington is that to govern is to choose. It is to choose between the dizzying array of wants, wishes, and needs of the American people, while constrained by the Constitution, fiscal, and political realities of the day.

Sadly, the leadership of the majority of this House have punted on choosing anything. They have ignored fiscal realities, our present condition, and the constitutional limits on our authority, and simply enacted whatever they could twist enough arms to pass. This majority has made promises it cannot keep with money it does not have. It has not made hard choices; it has not governed. No place is this more evident than in the Speaker's refusal to pass a budget this year, the most basic fiscal document our Nation has.

The budget is the foundation of all the taxing and spending that the Federal Government does. It constrains the appropriators and sets the boundaries for the spending debate. In choosing not to pass a budget, the Speaker is failing in her responsibility to govern this House and our Nation.

The American people, though, are not standing idly by. They are suggesting difficult choices for the Speaker through the YouCut program. To date, the American people have voiced support for over $60 billion in hard choices.

Mr. Speaker, we are a Nation governed by the people; the people are not being heard. This Congress is not listening.

AMERICAN JOBS

(Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about jobs: where we were, where we are, and where I hope that we will be in the next 10 years.

In the last 3 months of 2008, we lost an average of approximately 650,000 jobs per month. The first quarter of 2009 saw us lose over 700,000 jobs per month. In the first quarter of 2009, our economy shrunk by 6.4 percent.

We have stopped the bleeding. We have added jobs in six of the last 7 months, averaging almost 200,000 jobs, the majority originating in the private sector. If this pace continues, this administration will have added more jobs in 1 year than the previous Bush administration did in 8 years. I repeat, 1 year compared to 8 years. Our economy grew by 3 percent for 3 straight quarters of economic growth, 9 percent in 12 months. After February of 2009, household wealth grew for 10 straight months, regaining nearly 30 percent, $5 trillion of the $17.5 trillion of household wealth wiped out during the former Bush administration in its final 18 months.

We have stopped the bleeding. The economic policies of this Congress is investing in America. There is no snap-your-finger fix to our economy.

PASS A BUDGET

(Mr. THOMPSON of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. THOMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives has passed a budget every year since the Congressional Budget Act took effect in fiscal year 1976. To be completely accurate, there have been times under both Democrats and Republicans when a finished budget was not passed by both Houses. But this is the first time the House of Representatives has simply decided there is too much peril for the American public to see the numbers that they are pursuing, so they are going to stop the game before the coin is even tossed.

We have more than $13 trillion in debt and a Presidential budget that puts the deficit at $1.6 trillion and spends $3.8 trillion. Even Fed Chairman Ben Bernanke says this budget is, quote, "unsustainable."

Faced with similar challenges in your personal budget, there would be a talk around the kitchen table and the children's allowances would be cut, along with many other luxuries. It is that discussion that the majority seems unwilling to have under the theory that if they ignore it, it might go away. Unfortunately, the debt will not go away. The pain will be transferred to our children and grandchildren in the hopes that they will have the guts to face reality.

WALL STREET REFORM

(Ms. FUDGE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. FUDGE. Mr. Speaker, Congress must decide whether to protect the interests of a few deceptive bankers who ruined the industry for others or to protect the hardworking Americans of this Nation.

House Democrats have already decided. We have decided to choose Main Street over Wall Street. We have decided to choose parents who want to provide for their children and for people who are saving for retirement. We have decided, Mr. Speaker, that the American people are more important than the overzealous bankers.

Maintaining the status quo is not the answer. Look at what the current situation has done to America. Eight million jobs were lost without the safeguards to protect Main Street. Millions of homes were taken in foreclosure due to subprime mortgage schemes.

American people deserve and want better. A CNN poll shows 6 out of 10 Americans support Wall Street reform. Republicans have blocked efforts to protect Americans. House Republicans voted unanimously against the Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act. This act would reform Wall Street, reform executive pay, end taxpayer-funded bailouts, and hold banks and financial firms accountable to the American taxpayers.

Congressional Republicans are making backroom deals with the bankers. It is time for us to protect Main Street.

The same Republicans who deregulated the industry, and opposed reforms, now claim the Wall Street reform bill "allows bailouts." This is false.

Let's give Americans what they deserve—fairness in the financial system.

PASS A BUDGET

(Mr. DREIER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, at this time last year, we, for the first time in the 221-year history of our Republic, saw the appropriations process shut down, completely shut down. Never before had that happened. It was difficult to imagine that anything could be done to jeopardize and undermine openness, transparency, and accountability than shutting down the appropriations process.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it's hard to believe, but this Democratic majority has gone one step further. Incomprehensible, but they have now decided not to pass a budget at all. Now, in the last 17 months, we have witnessed an 84 percent increase in nondefense discretionary spending. And we all know that a budget is a blueprint and absolutely essential if a majority is going to make any attempt whatsoever to govern.

Well, Mr. Speaker, they have failed in the appropriations process, and now they have failed to come forward with even a budget. Our children and our grandchildren deserve better.

PASS A BUDGET

(Mr. CARTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, a recent Gallup Poll tells us that the American people rank the growing debt in this country as the single most threatening issue to the future of our country's well-being.

When the American public in their homes face a debt crisis, the first thing they do is prepare a budget so they can live within their means and start to reduce their debt burden. But this House, under the Democratic leadership, has chosen to prepare no budget. In fact, for the first time in modern budgetary history, they are telling us there will be no budget here in this House this year.

Mr. Speaker, the American people are crying out for us to get control of our spending. How can we control our spending without a budget? It's a crying shame there is no budget. No wonder we've got issues with jobs.

And by the way, when you're trying to create jobs, why do you shut down a major industry in the gulf and kill tens of thousands of jobs up and down the gulf coast, stopping drilling in the Gulf of Mexico?

PASS A BUDGET

(Mr. SESSIONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, today Republicans are on the floor of the House of Representatives speaking out on behalf of the American people that we believe that the leadership of this House of Representatives should bring forth a budget, a budget that would give the American people more confidence in this body. We are at record low numbers of people who have confidence in the leadership of the House of Representatives, the ability to lead this country in a direction that will bring us closer to jobs and addressing the issues of this Nation.

We just got the budget numbers that come in from May, and through May of this year, we have a $936 billion deficit. Mr. Speaker, the American people understand that we must have a road map, a road map to lead America back to where we become an employer Nation again. Taxing, spending, and unemployment will not lead us that way.

I urge this House leadership, the Democrats, please bring forward a budget where the American people can be part of this debate.

RECOGNIZING THE NEED FOR JOB CREATION POLICIES

(Mr. BOOZMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BOOZMAN. Mr. Speaker, sales are suffering, the economy remains stagnant, and millions of hardworking Americans are looking for work. Arkansans believe that the recent Obama-Pelosi health care bill, cap-and-trade, and other job-killing tax increases will hurt, not help, our struggling economy.

We should take action to help businesses get on their feet by focusing on job creation as opposed to some of the misplaced priorities. New taxes and health care mandates are harming smaller firms and businesses. The so-called stimulus bill is not creating long-term jobs but is increasing the budget deficit and sending the bill, plus interest, to tomorrow's taxpayers.

Congress must stop growing the tax burden and creating job-killing policies. Tax relief and incentives for small businesses would help all Americans, especially the middle class, and get our economy back on track. The key to this will be fiscal discipline. Now is the time to put a cap on Washington spending and to focus on the economic issues that matter instead of further inflating the national debt.

PUT PEOPLE TO WORK

(Mr. GARAMENDI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. GARAMENDI. Mr. Speaker, we just heard a very interesting 1-minute presentation that didn't make much sense. We have a world of hurt. People are unemployed. People are going to lose their jobs in local governments and State governments, and teachers are going to be laid off across this Nation. And to simply say we need fiscal discipline doesn't solve this problem.

The Democrats put out, without one Republican vote, an American Recovery Act a little more than a year ago, and it really worked. People did get jobs. Things were done. Infrastructure was built. We need to continue that, and we need to keep people working.

Yes, we need fiscal discipline, and I would be welcoming any idea from the Republicans on how they are going to do that other than simply say there ought to be. Yes, there ought to be, but we need right now to put people to work.

There is a program that's available that will be coming up that will stimulate small businesses. It puts forward major programs for the Small Business Administration to support loans. We also need to support the local governments. Yes, it's going to cost us some money in the short term, but we have a choice: We are either going to put people to work or we are going to have welfare. I want people to work. I want them to be taxpayers.

THE GULF OIL SPILL TRAGEDY

(Mr. PENCE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PENCE. The oil spill in the gulf is a widening tragedy of epic proportions. BP must be held accountable for every dime of cost that will affect the families and the environment and the communities of our gulf region. And this administration must be held responsible, responsible for failing to provide the kind of energetic leadership that the American people expect and the law demands.

What's obvious to Americans across the political spectrum is this administration has been a day late since day one. Unable to make this crisis a national priority, we now hear that the President is poised tonight to go to the Oval Office in the midst of explaining the Federal response to this crisis and use it as an opportunity to press for a climate change bill.

The American people don't want this administration to exploit the disaster in the gulf to advance their disastrous energy policies. America needs a new energy policy. But cap-and-trade won't cap that well. This administration should work the problem in the gulf instead of working their liberal environmental agenda.

THE U.S.-MEXICO PARLIAMENTARY EXCHANGE

(Mr. POLIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. POLIS. This last weekend, I was part of a delegation to Campeche, Mexico, as part of the U.S.-Mexico parliamentary exchange. This was the 49th annual U.S.-Mexico parliamentary exchange, and I rise today to emphasize the importance of the U.S.-Mexico relationship.

Our topics included three major areas:

We talked about border security, what we need to do on both sides of the border to improve security, to reduce the flow of drugs from Mexico into the United States, and reduce the flow of weapons from the United States into Mexico;

We talked about how to expand our economic partnership to create jobs in both nations. Mexico, depending upon how you measure it, is our second or third largest trade partner, and we continue to grow our trade;

And finally, we talked about immigration. However frustrating it is for the United States to deal with this issue, it's even more frustrating for Mexico to see many of their best and brightest fleeing northward. And the Mexican Government resolves to take action on this issue. Likewise, it's critical for our country to replace our broken immigration system with one that works for the United States.

PASS A BUDGET

(Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, we have heard today some comments from our friends on the other side of the aisle about fiscal responsibility and about creating jobs, but the one thing we haven't heard from them is anything about the budget.

If they were from Hollywood, they would be up here saying, "We don't need no stinkin' budget." If they were involved in, oh, Presidential politics a few years ago, they would say, "Where's the beef? Where's the budget?"

Fiscal responsibility starts with knowing where you are and where you are going. Every family in America adopts a budget, but I guess we are too big to fail. We are too big to create budgets because we can just print money after money after money. The fundamental proposition is, as stated by the chairman of the Budget Committee a couple years ago, if you can't budget, you can't govern.

They've told us they can't budget. They're proving to us they can't govern. The problem is this is not a game; this is not a Hollywood movie; this is real life, and real people are hurting.

Let's get down to the business of helping people by being responsible here, and let's start with a budget. Everybody understands that, perhaps, except the Democratic leadership.

PASS WALL STREET REFORM

(Mr. SNYDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, Americans deserve a financial system that protects their savings and their money. Until this Congress passes the Wall Street reform package, America's families and small businesses are at risk. By supporting reform, we support the kind of financial stability that supports job creation.

Regulation, effective regulation, is the unbiased referee that protects us as we compete. Everyone benefits when Americans' savings are protected and small businesses can get loans. Yesterday's laws do not protect us today.

I commend Chairman FRANK and Senator BAUCUS for their hard work going on right now to get a final version of Wall Street reform before this Congress for the American people.

AMERICANS WILL BE FORCED TO CHANGE THEIR HEALTH CARE PLAN

(Mr. FLEMING asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, the selling of ObamaCare to the American public has been trademarked by one empty promise after another. On September 9, 2009, President Obama infamously promised Americans, and I quote, "If you are among the hundreds of millions of Americans who already have health insurance through your job, nothing in this plan will require you or your employer to change the coverage or the doctor you have." Yet yesterday, in an ironic twist, the Obama administration released draft regulations indicating that up to 69 percent of employer-provided plans may be forced to change their health plans when the new health care law's mandates and requirements begin.

Speaker PELOSI was quoted as saying that we will have to pass this bill to find out what's in it. As the fine print is being placed, we are learning bad news daily about this unpopular law.

Mr. Speaker, I again ask: How many promises will ObamaCare have to break with the American people before we repeal this disastrous legislation?

PRESCRIPTION DRUG DOUGHNUT HOLE

(Ms. SCHAKOWSKY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. About 80,000 senior citizens and people with disabilities have already fallen into what we call the doughnut hole. What is that? That is a gap in Medicare prescription drug coverage and is a result of—you know, we just heard criticism of so-called ObamaCare—but the Republicans passed a bill called Medicare part D.

But what it says is that Mrs. Jones, after a certain amount of money that has been spent on her prescription drugs stands in line at the drugstore and says, I'm ordering a refill of my prescriptions.

And the druggist says, Well, Mrs. Jones, that will be $100.

She says, What do you mean, I thought I was insured?

They say, Oh, no, you've gone over the amount of money that the government will give you, and now you're going to have to pay $3,000-plus out of pocket in order to get covered again.

Well, we finally have done something about that, and checks are going to start going out this week to people, the 80,000 that have fallen into the doughnut hole, of $250 to try and help them pay for that, and we're going to ease out the prescription drug doughnut hole.

LEADERSHIP REQUIRES MAKING TOUGH DECISIONS

(Mrs. McMORRIS RODGERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. McMORRIS RODGERS. Mr. Speaker, you know, America is broke, and it's time for us to start making tough decisions. Continuing debt spending is actually the easy choice. Leadership requires making tough decisions, and yet we stand here today as Members of Congress with the majority not even sending up a budget.

Now, the Obama administration did propose a budget. It was $3.8 trillion funded with revenue that totaled $2.2 trillion. The majority doesn't even seem to want to address the budget. Now, when we were in the majority, JOHN SPRATT said, If you can't forward a budget, you can't govern, and yet today we don't see a budget.

All across this country, American families have had to readdress their budget, make tough decisions in their family households. That's what you do during difficult times. Businesses have had to make tough decisions, and yet this Congress is refusing to make the tough choices. Instead we continue the deficit spending, tacking on debt to the next generation.

America deserves better. Our children and our grandchildren deserve better than continued deficit spending.

STAND UP FOR HARDWORKING AMERICANS

(Mr. WALZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WALZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call on Members of Congress and the Wall Street reform conference committee to stand up for hardworking Americans and send us a strong bill that protects the interests of those on Main Street who have been continuing and will continue to pay the price for Wall Street excesses.

Over the past few weeks, I've been meeting with small business owners, like Joe Lorentz of Myles Lorentz Trucking Company in Mankato, Minnesota. Community leaders, like Owatonna Mayor Tom Kuntz, Waseca Mayor Roy Srp, and New Ulm Mayor Joel Albrecht, and all of them have delivered a very simple message: We must end too big to fail by ensuring large financial firms are allowed to fail without burdening the taxpayer. We must protect Main Street businesses and consumers from the negative effects of greed run amuck. And we must not penalize Main Street institutions that work, community banks, credit unions and auto dealerships.

So on behalf of Main Street Minnesota, I urge my colleagues to send us a tough bill that restores transparency and accountability to America.

FISCAL YEAR 2010 EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL AND FISCAL YEAR 2011 BUDGET

(Mr. ROGERS of Kentucky asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROGERS of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the American people deserve better from their elected leaders. Vital funds to protect our troops are being held hostage, and serious proposals to deal with our soaring national debt aren't even being discussed in this body.

The brave men and women fighting our enemies overseas have been waiting for Congress to approve an emergency funding bill critical to their operations since February. Over 4 months later, still nothing. Only broken promises and missed opportunities for bipartisanship. Not only has the majority party repeatedly failed to deliver funds for our troops in harm's way, they've bypassed regular order to tack on billions more in unnecessary deficit spending. No committee deliberations, no markups, no offer of amendments, and no input from the minority. It's a national disgrace.

I urge the Congress to act to support our troops.

SMALL BUSINESS LENDING FUND ACT

(Mr. BACA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BACA. This week, the Chamber will consider H.R. 5297, the Small Business Lending Fund Act. This bill will create a small business loan fund and provide capital to American small businesses. This bill also includes a boost to State lending programs, providing $2 billion in funding to new and existing programs across the country.

Small businesses are the backbone of the American economy and create two out of three jobs in this country. Our economy has begun to show signs of growth and recovery, and our largest financial institutions are stabilized, but it's time to assist local and community banks that provide the bulk of the capital to small businesses.

Job creation needs to be the number one priority forward, and legislation like this will help accomplish our goals and restore the public faith in our economy.

I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on H.R. 5297 when it comes before us.

WE MUST HAVE A BUDGET RESOLUTION

(Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, it's now official. We're now a full 2 months behind the congressional deadline with no budget resolution in sight. In the past, this would be just another failure by the majority to meet a technical responsibility. But this year is different.

This administration's enormous government spending increases have driven our annual budget shortfall to $1.4 trillion. That's the deficit. We're spending $1.4 trillion more than we're bringing in. The accumulation of all our past budget deficits, the national debt, last month rocketed past $13 trillion, and media reports last week predicted that it would balloon over $15 trillion by 2015.

And how do we finance this debt? When American families and businesses find themselves short of cash, they cut their spending. When the Federal Government finds itself with a record deficit, we borrow money. From whom? The Chinese, the Japanese, from the Saudis, and we pay interest on that debt, hundreds of billions of dollars each year.

We can do better. We must do better. We must have a budget resolution. We must cut spending.

MONEY IN THE STIMULUS BILL WENT TO THE RIGHT PEOPLE

(Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MURPHY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ran for Congress 4 years ago because I had watched the Republicans use the power that they had accrued here to turn our government over to their friends in the oil industry and the insurance industry, the drug industry and the banking industry, and so I wonder what kind of stimulus bill they would have written last year were they still in charge.

It would have been very different than the one that's on the ground today in Connecticut, one that has put funds in a small solar company in Bethel, Connecticut, Apollo Solar, creating jobs in renewable energy; a stimulus bill that just opened up a new early Head Start program in Danbury, Connecticut, employing 20 people immediately and creating a lot of job opportunities for the parents who now have child care. It would have been very different than the bill that gave millions and millions in tax credits to middle- and lower-income individuals in Connecticut that have allowed them to go out and start to create a retail resurgence.

The stimulus bill would have been done very differently under the Republicans. Democrats in charge, the money went to the right people.

KYRGYZSTAN

(Mr. PITTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, this week, violence flared up in Kyrgyzstan, prompting tens of thousands of Uzbeks to flee their homes and places of birth to seek refuge in neighboring countries. Innocent people, including women, children and the elderly, are suffering with over 100 killed.

Just 2 months ago, the people deposed the authoritarian President Bakiyev, who promptly fled to Belarus and the protection of the Lukashenko government. Approval of a new constitution and general elections were proceeding smoothly until the recent violence, which was prompted by forces supportive of the deposed president and other lawless elements.

Even with the present chaos, the interim Kurdish government is insisting that the date of elections will remain unchanged. For many years, I've worked with the nations along the old Silk Road in central Asia, and it pains me to see the Kyrgyz fleeing violence in their homeland.

The U.S. wants to keep our Air Force base in Kyrgyzstan, but we have shown little interest in helping the people of this nation build a republic that respects human rights free of corruption. Even China and Russia are lending their support with humanitarian aid flights. We need the State Department and President Obama to offer the support of America to a nation struggling to create democracy and freedom to strengthen their independence and sovereignty.

Without action on the part of the U.S., violence will continue, and then more than just a military base will be lost.

DON'T LET AN OIL SPILL RUIN YOUR VACATION

(Mr. FARR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today as co-chair of the Congressional Tourism Caucus to remind this Nation that we should not let an oil spill ruin our vacation. Disasters drive people away from wherever there is a disastrous incident. In the Gulf States, local tourism is suffering from it. It's suffering from the greatest oil spill in American history.

Mr. President, when you address the Nation tonight, I hope you will urge them to visit the Gulf States to shore up the local economy and have BP pay for that tourism promotion. I urge you to have the coastal State Governors support a regional tourism plan for the Gulf States for this summer, for now, immediately.

A disaster of this proportion is a disaster of national significance. It's time that we as a Nation respond by spending our money and our time in those communities most affected. God bless America. Let's promote tourism.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair requests that Members observe decorum by addressing comments through the Chair.

THE BUDGET

(Mrs. LUMMIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. LUMMIS. Mr. Speaker, when you and I and the American people want to start a business and we want to borrow money to do it, we go to a bank, and we have to present a business plan with income projections and where we are going to get the money to pay the debt we're requesting back.

When my State of Wyoming is doing a budget, it projects its revenue, and every month we see how much money we have collected pursuant to those projections. And if we don't have enough money, we cut our budget.

In Washington, we don't even have a budget. For the first time since 1974, this House does not have a budget, isn't going to pass one. That's irresponsible. That's not leadership.

Mr. SPRATT was right: If you can't budget, you can't govern. And this is a perfect example, Mr. Speaker.

WE HAVE TO HOLD BP ACCOUNTABLE FOR THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

(Mr. BRALEY of Iowa asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BRALEY of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, a week ago I was in Chalmette, Louisiana, for a field hearing on the BP Deepwater Horizon oil disaster. We heard compelling testimony from people whose lives have been devastated, including two of the widows who lost their husbands on that explosion on the rig. We also flew out over the site of that disaster, and as they opened up the rear hatch on the plane, you could see the burn-off from the relief wells being drilled, and you could smell the overpowering stench of oil coming off the water.

Well, our friends on the other side like to take a position that government should be hands off when it comes to business development, and BP is teaching us that we can't afford to let businesses misrepresent to this country what they're planning to do the way BP did when they knew that there was a 99 percent chance of a blowout during the 40-year period of this lease and still got a waiver from any deep, intensive environmental impact analysis before that well was explored.

We have to hold this company accountable for the American people, the American taxpayers.

They created this problem. This is what happens when we stay hands off and don't keep people accountable for their conduct.

SPENDING IS OUT OF CONTROL

(Mrs. SCHMIDT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, spending is out of control. In April, the U.S. Government ran a record monthly deficit of $82.7 billion. That's almost $83 billion in just one month.

Unfortunately, the Democratic majority has done nothing to reduce spending. Overall, spending has only gone up since they've been in power. Perhaps the most outrageous thing is that the majority is not even trying to pass a budget, which would give us a framework to rein in runaway spending.

Budgeting is the most basic duty of government. Yet here we are 2 months beyond the deadline to produce a Federal budget, and it doesn't appear this House will produce one. This will be the first time since 1974 we haven't produced a budget. Failing to consider a budget doesn't make the problems go away. It simply provides more proof that the current leadership in Congress has no plans for dealing with the debt and deficits that continue to rise.

We cannot keep laying the current financial burdens on our children and our grandchildren. They can't afford it, and we can't afford it. Let's pass a budget. Reduce spending, rein in, and get ourselves back in control.

SECOND ANNIVERSARY OF THE DEVASTATING FLOODS OF 2008

(Mr. LOEBSACK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LOEBSACK. Mr. Speaker, 2 years ago, Iowa experienced the worst natural disaster in our State's history as a result of the great flood of 2008. We have made amazing progress, but 2 years later there is still damage in small and large communities like Oakville, Columbus Junction, Palo, Cedar Rapids, and Iowa City. Many homeowners are struggling to recover still, and many small businesses have been unable to access relief programs because of red tape, all this on top of an economic downturn. Government-wide, we need to cut down on red tape and approve efficiency. I think we can all agree with that. With disaster relief, this is even more important because effective assistance is absolutely critical to communities' ability to recover.

Communities are also trying to mitigate future flooding through a variety of structural and nonstructural means. I will continue to work with city leaders, homeowners, and businesses to ensure that we reduce inefficiency and the chances of another devastating flood like the one we experienced in Iowa 2 years ago.

PARTIAL DRILLING IN LOUISIANA

(Mr. CAO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CAO. Mr. Speaker, the oil disaster in the Gulf of Mexico has caused great economic impact to my district. Hundreds of businesses have closed and thousands of people are out of work. The moratorium imposed by the administration potentially can also cost Louisiana thousands of jobs, yet there is a very simple solution to allow the administration the time that it needs to review the safety and to implement procedures for the deep oil industry and at the same time preserve the jobs in Louisiana: Allow the oil companies to do partial drilling; allow them to drill, but do not allow them to tap into the reservoir.

Modern technology allows companies to know exactly where the oil is. What this partial drilling does is preserve the jobs in Louisiana during a time when we need the amount of revenue that the State needs to sustain its economy to help the people to bring about the livelihood.

RECORD-BREAKING DEFICITS MEAN CONGRESS SHOULD PASS A BUDGET

(Ms. FOXX asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, someone once said, If you can't budget, you can't govern. Those words came from my distinguished colleague from South Carolina, the current chairman of the Budget Committee. He uttered them in 2006 as ranking member of the committee. The question is, What does that mean for this Congress?

Today, we face a budget deficit five times larger than the one that Congress faced in 2006 of $1.4 trillion, and here we are 2 months past the budget deadline and there is no budget. Unprecedented spending, unprecedented debt, and no budget.

It is only 8 months into the current fiscal year and the Federal Government has racked up close to $1 trillion in new debt. Mr. Speaker, it's time for this Congress to prove it can govern and debate a budget. If today's record-breaking deficits aren't reason enough to debate a budget, then I don't know what is.

WHERE'S THE BUDGET?

(Mr. MCCLINTOCK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MCCLINTOCK. Mr. Speaker, suppose your family is deeply in debt, bills are piling up, your credit card interest is eating you alive, and finally you seek the help of a financial counselor. What's the first thing that debt counselor is going to say? He's going to say, the first thing we've got to do is sit down and sketch out a family budget. We all know that. It's hard work, it's painful, but it's absolutely necessary if you're going to get your finances back under control.

Mr. Speaker, our national debt is fast approaching the size of our entire economy, yet while this House has all the time in the world to consider the most trivial matters, it can't spare the time to develop a national budget at the very moment in the life of our Nation when we need one the most, before we bury our children in debt.

Churchill once spoke of a locust generation. I wonder if that's what we've become.

DOES THE ADMINISTRATION FAVOR GOVERNMENT WORKERS?

(Mr. BISHOP of Utah asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BISHOP of Utah. Mr. Speaker, with no budget or overall spending plan, the administration apparently wants at least another $25 billion to save the jobs of local government workers; yet at the same time, the administration's space plan would destroy 30,000 jobs, many of them scientists and engineers who are working in the private sector who would cost this government nine times less. Is there any kind of wonder why so many people watching what we're doing in Washington suffer from policy whiplash? It's almost as if this administration is saying, If you are a government worker, we'll bend over backwards to help you, but if you're in the private sector, especially a scientist or engineer, you'd better be hoping that Wal-Mart is hiring.

BUDGET

(Mr. BROUN of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BROUN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, Congress received a surprise Saturday night. Late in the evening, President Obama sent a letter to Republicans and Democrats requesting an additional $50 billion in emergency stimulus funds. After justifying his new spending request, President Obama expressed a newfound interest in fiscal responsibility. He urged Washington to "establish a fiscally responsible budget path, discipline the budget process, and ensure a sustainable and responsible long-term budget." I have just one question: What budget?

For the first time since 1974, Democrats in the House have failed to even outline a budget. Similar to the family budget, a Federal budget provides guidance and transparency for how the government spends the American people's hard-earned money. With the U.S. national debt at $13 trillion—and rising—I agree that Congress needs to discipline the budget process. Unfortunately, President Obama's spending request does not reflect his rhetoric.

SPILLED OIL ROYALTY COLLECTION ACT

(Ms. PINGREE of Maine asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. PINGREE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, last week I introduced legislation to make sure that BP pays royalties on all of the oil from the Deepwater Horizon disaster. The Spilled Oil Royalty Collection Act, H.R. 5513, will ensure that BP pays royalties on every gallon of oil spilled without the administration having to determine whether BP was negligent or violating MMS regulations. Royalties on oil drilled at offshore locations are paid to the Minerals Management Service, MMS, in an effort to compensate taxpayers for the use of publicly owned resources. Under current regulations, leaseholders like BP are only obligated to pay royalties on gallons of oil sold. This legislation is part of responding to the disaster in the gulf and holding BP accountable.

We need to clean up and repair the gulf, holding BP accountable for its oil spill, enact stronger environmental, technological and spill response standards, and invest in an American clean-energy future.

BP CEO was on television saying that his company will "make it right," but we should have more than just a television commercial to go on. We need the force of law to make sure they pay every penny they owe to us. I hope you will join me in supporting this important piece of legislation.

AMERICANS DEMAND A BUDGET

(Mr. WITTMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WITTMAN. Mr. Speaker, as I travel around America's First District, I hear unanimously from folks out there, and they ask this question: ROB, what's happening in Washington about our budget? Why do we continue to deficit spend? We are on an unsustainable path. When are we going to reduce the national debt?

I was just in Heathsville, Virginia, on Sunday. There folks asked, ROB, when is Congress going to adopt a budget? Why aren't you adopting a budget? We, as family members, have to adopt a budget. We have to make sure that we're responsible in spending. Why isn't Washington doing the same thing? Well, I ask the majority the same question, Why aren't we adopting a budget? Why aren't we on a path of sustainable spending, reducing this deficit and addressing this national debt?

Folks, it's incumbent for this country to do that; it's a responsibility of this Congress to do that. I challenge the majority to do their duty, put a budget on the table. Let us get to work for the American people.

BUDGET

(Mr. CALVERT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of the American people who deserve an answer about the out-of-control spending policies coming out of Washington. For the first time, the House has failed to produce a budget. There is no plan for how the majority will spend the American taxpayers' hard-earned money for fiscal year 2011.

For American families, if they don't get a budget and pay the bills, there are real consequences. Unfortunately, the majority continues to turn a blind eye to future consequences as they push spending to a record $3.8 trillion in fiscal year 2011 and widen the deficit to a record $1.5 trillion this year.

House Republicans stand ready to make tough choices in order to rein in spending. Recently, we introduced a measure on the House floor to freeze Federal civilian pay, which will save about $30 billion over 10 years. The program was selected by the American people through the innovate YouCut initiative. The American people have spoken: stop the spending frenzy, budget for the future, and return fiscal sanity to Washington.

WHERE'S THE BUDGET?

(Mr. PETRI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, each and every year since passage of the Budget Reform Act of 1974, this House has managed to produce a budget resolution, a document necessary for responsible governing—each and every year except this one.

What's the problem? In addition to outlining spending for the year ahead, budget resolutions include plans for multiple years, laying out anticipated spending and revenue and calculating anticipated deficits and surpluses. If the House were to pass a 2011 budget resolution, it would establish as official House policy that we will run enormous deficits for as far as the eye can see, but several Democrats here are reluctant to associate themselves with such an irresponsible document. Of course it's theoretically possible that the current House majority could propose a budget resolution mapping a path back to balanced budgets. But no. Substantial numbers of the Democrats here think we should be spending more, not less.

With Members in the majority party pulling in opposite directions, the majority leadership appears to have given up on finding the votes necessary to pass an official budget whether big spending or responsible. This is a failure of mammoth proportions.

DISASTER RECOVERY IN THE GULF

(Mr. SCALISE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SCALISE. Mr. Speaker, I spent this last Friday on Grand Isle, South Louisiana, which is at the epicenter right now of this battle against the oil which is coming into our marsh. The anger and frustration I heard from official after official on the ground was that they are spending more time fighting the Federal Government and BP than they are fighting the oil. This is unacceptable.

It still goes on day after day, 57 days in, and the President continues to refuse to lead on this crisis. He has let BP be the gatekeeper for our local officials who have plans to protect our marsh. Yet they now have to go through BP instead of having the President have a real command structure that holds people accountable.

The latest plan by the President is to actually have this ban on offshore drilling that actually punishes everybody—people who haven't done anything wrong and who have much safer records than BP. Now, over 40,000 people are going to be put out of work by the President's arbitrary ban, which actually goes against the recommendations of his own scientific panel. So now he is placing politics in front of science.

When is the President going to meet his obligations under the law to lead and to be responsible for the disaster recovery with BP's paying the bill instead of allowing BP to call the shots on the ground?

WHERE IS THE BUDGET?

(Mr. MARCHANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MARCHANT. Mr. Speaker, for some time now, my colleagues have come to the floor to ask the question: Where are the jobs? Now, in addition to asking that question, I am also asking: Where is the budget?

With our national debt standing at over $13 trillion, we must enact a plan to curb wasteful and reckless spending. Although Democrats in this House have not undertaken the hard work of compiling a budget plan, House Republicans have.

Under the Republican plan, we reduce the 10-year deficit by $3.3 trillion. The Democrats have no plan to do this.

Under the Republican plan, we borrow 3.6 trillion fewer dollars than the administration does. Congressional Democrats have no plan.

Under the Republican plan, we spend $4.8 trillion less than the President's bloated budget. Once again, congressional Democrats have no plan.

I call on the majority today to produce a budget so that we can have a debate on improving our fiscal condition.

DAY 57 OF THE DEEPWATER HORIZON OIL SPILL

(Mr. PUTNAM asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PUTNAM. Mr. Speaker, today marks the 57th day of the BP Deepwater Horizon oil spill. It is estimated that up to 40,000 barrels of oil may be flowing into the Gulf of Mexico each and every day.

At this point, it is nearly impossible to even calculate the impact this spill will have on Florida's economy as well as on the other Gulf States. Oystermen, charter captains, restaurants, and hoteliers are already suffering, along with those who depend on them. The gulf fishing industry alone supports 200,000 jobs.

It is important to note that Florida remains open for business. Our beaches and restaurants continue to welcome guests from throughout the Nation and from around the world, but we must eliminate the bureaucracy that is causing delays in this recovery, from sideline volunteers to unused skimmers, to ensure that Florida's economy and vital tourism remain vibrant.

Tonight, the President will address the Nation. After 2 months of delayed promises, failures, and finger-pointing, it is time for leadership. It is time for action that addresses this crisis.

STOP THE LEAK AND PASS A BUDGET

(Mr. TURNER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, today is the 57th day of one of the largest oil disasters in history. Today is also the 166th day this year that this Congress has failed to produce a budget.

Each day, oil continues to flow into the gulf, increasing the catastrophic damage. Also each day, this Congress continues to produce red ink, damaging the American economy. The administration was caught flatfooted, repeatedly underestimating the severity of the oil leak and slowly allocating critical Federal resources to the gulf.

While red ink is flowing out of Washington and while oil is flowing into the gulf, this administration has no plan, and this Congress has no budget. How are we going to stop the oil leak, and how are we going to stop the red ink?

Just as the President has no plan, this Congress has no budget. For the first time since 1974, when the Budget Act was enacted, this House has failed to pass a budget resolution. This is a catastrophic disaster.

Mr. President, stop the leak.

Mr. Speaker, pass a budget.

ECONOMIC RECOVERY

(Mr. RYAN of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I think it's time for a little bit of a history lesson.

Before President Obama even got into office, that first January, we were losing almost 800,000 jobs a month; the stock market was at 6,000, and the Republican policies had all been implemented on energy, on health care, on budget, on foreign policy, with tax cuts for the wealthiest, with borrowing the money, and with running our country and our economy off the cliff.

We are turning the country around. We now have positive job growth. The stock market went up to 11,000 and now up past 10,000. 401(k)s are returning. Jobs are coming back. We do not need to go backwards with the Republican economic policies that drove us off the cliff in the first place.

I ask my friends on the other side, Mr. Speaker:

What are you going to tell the police officers, the firefighters, and the teachers who will get laid off if this country doesn't step up to bat and reinvest back in America? What are you going to tell them? What are you going to tell them?

We have enough money for the wealthiest to get tax breaks, but we don't have enough money for police, for firefighters, and for road projects in the United States.

Good luck.

REFORMING THE EARMARK PROCESS

(Mr. LAMBORN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LAMBORN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my Democrat colleagues: Where is the budget?

House Democrats haven't passed a budget for next year, something that hasn't happened in the modern era. This shows that they plan to spend without any restraint or accountability. If they can't budget, can they really govern?

However, one thing we can and must do is control runaway spending by reforming the earmark process. I have agreed to ban all earmarks for 1 year while we consider meaningful reform. I cosponsored the resolution, along with Leader JOHN BOEHNER and most of my Republican colleagues, calling for an earmark ban. I followed that up with a letter to the Democratic leadership, asking that House Democrats join me in this 1-year ban with other Republicans. I have also called for the creation of a joint select committee to come up with proposals to reform earmarks.

The American people are demanding that we get our fiscal house in order. They, too, want to know: Where is the budget?

HEALTH CARE REFORM IS LAW

(Ms. BALDWIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, since we have passed health care reform into law, I have received a flood of gratitude from my constituents.

Edith of Madison assures me "the plan will bring real benefits to many people in Wisconsin."

Beth of Verona also thanked me, saying that, for the first time, she believes someday every woman diagnosed with cancer won't have to worry about being buried by the bills.

Patrick of Madison wrote, "Don't let negativity and fear-mongering ever lead you to question your decision," which was to vote "yes."

Mr. Speaker, since I entered public service, I have worked to enact comprehensive health care reform. Now, just 2 months after this bill has become law, we are already seeing the expansion of insurance to young adults across the country. In just a few weeks, the Federal high-risk pool will be open to individuals who have been denied medical coverage because of pre-existing conditions, and seniors are already getting extra help with their prescription drugs.

With each milestone, I can feel hope grow across America.

JOBS AND THE ECONOMY

(Mr. WU asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WU. Mr. Speaker, inside the beltway, Republicans threaten to take us back to the failed policies that created this economic crisis in the first place. They are siding with the special interests, with credit card companies, with Big Oil, and with insurance companies. These failed economic and fiscal policies created the George Bush recession—the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression, with job losses of nearly 800,000 per month.

This Congress passed the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act, which is responsible for 2.8 million jobs saved or created, including jobs for teachers, police, and firefighters. More than a third of the bill was for tax cuts for 98 percent of Americans and for small businesses—the very people who suffered through 8 years of George W. Bush.

This act is also rebuilding America with clean tech, clean energy, and 21st century jobs. Our passage of health insurance reform will create not only 4 million new jobs over the next decade, primarily in small businesses, but it will also unleash the potential of the American economy.

STEADY ECONOMIC GROWTH IN AMERICA

(Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to report that we continue to see steady economic growth in our country. The work that we have done here in this very Chamber and the work that our President has done to ensure our economic turnaround is making a real and positive difference for America's families.

To put this statement into real numbers, here are some statistics that indicate undeniable growth and recovery: An average of 200,000 jobs have been created each month over the last 7 months. Stocks have risen across the board since the passage of the Recovery Act. We have now seen three quarters of economic growth. There are 98 percent of families who are seeing their taxes decrease for tax year 2009. Average refunds are up 10 percent, which is around $3,000. Since January of 2009, we have restored $5 trillion of household wealth.

In my own State of Florida, I am proud to report that, for the first time in nearly 4 years, we have seen improvement in the jobs report, with the unemployment rate dropping in May.

With these numbers as proof, I can say with confidence that America is on the road to recovery.

□ 1300

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from Maine is recognized for 1 hour.

Ms. PINGREE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Ms. FOXX). All time yielded during consideration of the rule is for debate only.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. PINGREE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and insert extraneous materials into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Ms. PINGREE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 1436 provides for consideration of H.R. 5297, the Small Business Lending Fund Act of 2010, under a structured rule, with 1 hour of general debate with 30 minutes controlled by the Committee on Financial Services and 30 minutes controlled by the Committee on Small Business.

The rule makes in order an amendment in the nature of a substitute consisting of the text of H.R. 5297, as reported by the Committee on Financial Services, with the addition of Title 3, which would establish at the Small Business Administration a program to provide equity financing to support early-stage and high-growth small businesses. It also includes a manager's amendment which makes a number of important changes to the base text.

The rule makes in order 17 amendments, which are printed in part C of the Rules Committee report accompanying the rule. The amendments are each debatable for 10 minutes. The rule provides one motion to recommit H.R. 5297, with or without instructions.

The rule also provides for consideration of H.R. 5486, the Small Business Jobs Tax Relief Act of 2010, under a closed rule. The rule provides 1 hour of debate controlled by the Committee on Ways and Means.

In addition to paying for the cost of the Small Business Lending Fund Act, it will provide a number of important tax breaks to our Nation's struggling small businesses.

The rule also provides one motion to recommit H.R. 5486, with or without instructions. The rule then provides that these two bills will be combined upon adoption before being sent to the Senate.

Additionally, the rule waives clause 6(a) of rule XIII, which would allow for same-day consideration through Friday, June 18, of a rule providing for consideration of any Senate amendment to H.R. 4213, the Americans Jobs and Closing Tax Loopholes Act of 2010.

Finally, the rule also allows the Speaker to entertain motions to suspend the rules through June 18.

Mr. Speaker, today, the House will take up two very important pieces of legislation that will directly help small businesses around the country. These bills will provide much needed support for the small businesses that make up our communities and are the backbone of our economy and our economic recovery. These bills will help small entrepreneurs grow and create jobs. As President Obama said last fall, supporting small businesses needs to be our highest priority because “when small businesses are succeeding, America succeeds.”

In order for small businesses to succeed, we must give them the tools they need to grow. One of these tools is the ability to access capital.

When I go back to Maine each week, I hear often the same story from business owners across the State. When the credit market dried up, they were hit hard. Now as the economy has started to make a recovery, they are still unable to access the credit they need to expand, rehire, and grow. About a year ago, I hosted an event focusing on helping connect small businesses with capital. The response was overwhelming. Hundreds of small business owners showed up, in fact, so many that we need an overflow room to accommodate the demand. There were businesses of all types and sizes, and many of these small business owners had driven hours to come to the workshop. They came to this meeting because they felt they had nowhere else to turn.

As a small business owner myself, I know what a challenge it can be to make ends meet. When I started my last business before the credit crunch, I was fortunate that I had a small community bank to work with that gave me access to capital I needed to start my business. But for many who have tried to get the money necessary to start, operate, and expand a business over the past few years, it hasn't been so easy. Today, we have an opportunity to make credit available to millions of small businesses across the country.

Today, we can assist the small lenders who know firsthand the difference those businesses make to a community. Today, we can make it easier for companies to get access to the financing that will help them grow, expand, and create jobs. The Congressional Research Service estimates that the investments made by this bill will stimulate $300 billion of lending to small businesses.

Small business owners and bankers alike have told me they think this bill is a good idea. As the economy recovers, it will help increase lending by our local financial institutions in Maine. As the owner of Rumery's boatyard, a small boatyard in Saco, Maine, told me, it is imperative that we support our small businesses and ensure that they are “ready to go once the economy fully recovers.” The folks at Rumery's make a good point.

Although we are now seeing signs of economic recovery, economists tell us that we could still face a double-dip recession if we aren't careful. Without access to capital, I'm afraid the recovery will be limited to Wall Street and not Main Street. By investing in small businesses, we can keep the momentum going and make sure the economic recovery turns into jobs for people in my State and across the country.

Mr. Speaker, let me tell you a little bit more about what I've heard from the people who live in my State. One person in my district who helps small business owners told me recently that he is “convinced that the inability of small businesses to access capital is the number one impediment to economic growth for our Nation.” He also said that he works with “successful entrepreneurs who survived the recession but are having a difficult time reestablishing their credit lines or accessing money for growth even when they have real, profitable opportunities. The banks are not necessarily lending unless you have hard collateral, and they are shutting down credit lines to customers who pay their bills on time.”

For example, over the past 17 years, one small manufacturing company in Cornish, Maine, has grown from a sole proprietorship to employing 17 people. They have borrowed money to invest heavily in the machinery and technology necessary to produce a high-quality product. But as the economy stalled out, they were facing a shortfall in receipts and needed to refinance, but have been struggling to find the capital they need. They are continuing to provide jobs and ship product all over the world and pay for their operating costs of doing their business. If they had access to capital, they could also continue to make innovative new designs. Demand for their product is increasing daily, and without financing, they are unable to grow their company and provide new jobs.

Small businesses are desperate for credit to expand and to grow. And that's why this bill is so important. As the economy picks up, small businesses in Maine and elsewhere in this country need to have the capital to expand and grow their businesses. Without access to capital, these businesses will not be able to grow. I look forward to supporting this important legislation later today.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from Maine for yielding time, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I will urge my colleagues on this side of the aisle to vote “no” on the rule and “no” on this bill, and I believe that my colleagues and I will be able to explain why.

In case there are some folks still listening to what my colleagues on the other side of the aisle were talking about in the last of the 1-minutes that were spoken a while ago, I need to say that they have very selective memories. They talked about what the economy was like when President Obama took office, and they blame everything on our former President Bush. But they failed to mention ever, ever, ever that they were in charge of the Congress the last 2 years of President Bush's administration, and they were the ones in charge of what was happening in terms of spending money and why our economy was in such an unfortunate situation. It's very easy to blame President Bush because he was President, but they were in charge of the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that I, again, find myself before this body amazed by the stunning arrogance of the liberal Democrats responsible for bringing this rule before us today which provides for consideration of H.R. 5297, the Small Business Lending Act, and accompanying legislation, H.R. 5486, a bill intended to offset the immense cost of H.R. 5297. Consideration of this legislation, which will cost taxpayers another $32 billion, comes at a time when the Democrats have demonstrated a complete paralysis in presenting the annual budget resolution necessary for guiding congressional spending decisions.

We all know that many small businesses have not been able to get available credit. However, the Democrat response is, unfortunately, too predictable: Borrow more money from foreign lenders in future generations and spend it on yet another in a long string of bailouts; create a lot of Federal Government jobs; and do nothing to really help small businesses.

The way we can help all businesses in this country is to lower taxes across the board and not continue to create unnecessary, inefficient government programs which don't deliver what they need to deliver.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. PINGREE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, I would now like to yield 5 minutes to my distinguished colleague from California (Mr. MCCLINTOCK).

Mr. MCCLINTOCK. I thank the gentlelady for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the supporters of this bill tell us it's going to increase lending to small businesses. To do so, they're creating a $30 billion slush fund to make loans to smaller banks, therefore encouraging smaller banks to make loans to small businesses, or so they say. I believe it is a splendid example of what I like to call McClintock's Second Law of Political Physics: The more we invest in our mistakes, the less willing we are to correct them. It has apparently escaped the supporters' attention that we are already doing precisely what the proposed new Small Business Lending Fund would do through the existing TARP Capital Purchase Program.

Now that's not just my conclusion. That's the conclusion of the Special Inspector General of TARP, Neil Barofsky. He wrote to the Financial Services Committee on May 17, and observed, "In terms of its basic design, its participants, its application process, and perhaps its funding source, from an oversight perspective, the Small Business Lending Fund would essentially be an extension of TARP's Capital Purchase Program."

So if this scheme actually worked, we wouldn't need this bill, would we? Banks would already be lending like crazy.

The only problem is, it doesn't work. But some Members can't bear to face the American people and admit that they have squandered billions of dollars of working families' hard-earned money. So, instead, they bring us more of the same.

Now this places an additional $30 billion of taxpayer money at risk. We're told, Don't worry; we'll get that money back.

When have we heard this song before? Oh, yes. When they bailed out Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. And according to the Congressional Budget Office, taxpayers have now lost $145 billion, heading to $400 billion.

Don't worry; it'll be paid back.

What is likely to happen to the $30 billion put at risk by this bill? Those banks with sound finances won't touch this money. They don't need it, and they don't need the Federal entanglements that come with it. Only those banks whose finances are unsound will accept these moneys, with little chance that they will actually be paid back. In fact, by removing the Special Inspector General from oversight of these funds, that risk is further aggravated.

And just to be clear, there's no guarantee that a dime of this money will actually be lent to small businesses in the first place. In fact, any commercial or industrial loan will count toward the requirements of this bill, not necessarily just loans to small businesses.

Now, after a failed $700 billion TARP, $30 billion might not sound like a lot of money. But let's put it in perspective. The combined cleanup and economic costs of the gulf oil spill are currently estimated around $17 billion. So in terms of economic damage, this bill could actually cost more than cleaning up the entire mess in the gulf. It's true that small businesses are having great difficulty getting loans. So are home buyers. Why is that? I suspect one of the principal reasons is that unprecedented public sector borrowing has crowded out the capital pool that would otherwise have been available to make private sector loans to small businesses and home buyers and consumers.

Under this administration and this Congress, the government is running a $1.5 trillion annual deficit. That's roughly $20,000 for every family of four in America. Well, where does that money come from? Well, we borrow it. From whom do we borrow it? We borrow it from the same capital pool that would otherwise have been available to loan to small businesses and other employers seeking to add jobs or loan to home buyers seeking to reenter the housing market or loan to consumers seeking to afford consumer purchases. And remember, two-thirds of economic growth directly depends upon those consumer purchases. But that money now is not available to loan to employers and to home buyers and to consumers to expand the economy because government has now borrowed it in order to expand government. That is the core of the problem.

Now, I've offered an amendment to forbid the use of this TARP III money in the presence of a deficit for a very simple reason: if the government borrows that money to loan to one business, that same money won't be available to loan to another business. Government cannot inject a single dollar into the economy until it has first taken that same dollar out of that same economy. But of course this amendment was forbidden under the rule we are now considering. Therefore, I oppose the rule, and I oppose the underlying bill.

Ms. PINGREE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN).

Mr. LANGEVIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I rise in strong support of this rule and the underlying legislation that provides relief to small businesses by expanding lending opportunities and offering tax incentives to help them grow. Small businesses are absolutely the backbone of the American economy, and they are especially important in my home State of Rhode Island, where they make up 97 percent of our employers.

Now more than ever, we are pursuing every possible avenue to create a job that gets this economy back on track. None of us can be satisfied that our economy is performing where it should be, especially in my home State where we now have the fourth highest unemployment rate in the Nation of 12.5 percent. None of us can accept that status quo right now, and Congress absolutely must support the growth of these small businesses and help stimulate the real engine of our Nation's economy.

American prosperity absolutely depends upon the success of small businesses and the innovative spirit of the American people, but they need the right support. I'm committed to bringing relief to the small businesses that are struggling in our States.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill, and let's give our small businesses what they need to create the jobs that will get America back on track.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, you know, this bill is being promoted as necessary to increase the availability for small businesses. But as my colleague from California so eloquently pointed out, it's really a bailout for banks that are in shaky positions. And what nobody has pointed out yet is, incredibly, this money doesn't have to be available for 2 years and probably will not be available for 2 years. So what is that going to do, again, to help small businesses that need help right now?

Again, as my colleague pointed out, it creates a $30 billion lending fund for banks with less than $10 billion in assets. It also is going to appropriate $2 billion to States to shore up their small business lending and guarantee programs. But we shouldn't be doing that either. We have no business going in and shoring up programs that the States have when they haven't been responsible with the use of their money. But what this bill is going to do is deepen our debt problems, duplicate the goal of the original $700 billion TARP program, as Mr. MCCLINTOCK pointed out.

We have nearly 10 percent unemployment, and the so-called economic leadership of the ruling liberal Democrats has proven to be a failure. This is TARP III, and its $32 billion price tag is not going to be any different from the previous mechanisms that they've used to try to stimulate the economy. Rather than proposing sound economic policies, like lowering taxes and reducing regulatory burdens, the Democrats continue to advocate misguided policies that expand the government's control and increase the Nation's debt. The simple truth is that taxpayers can't afford another bank bailout.

The original bailout bill, TARP I, was $700 billion. In 2009, our colleagues on the other side of the aisle rammed through a so-called stimulus bill costing $1.138 trillion—part of that is the cost of the interest—a $410 billion omnibus appropriations bill for FY09, a $3.6 trillion fiscal year 2010 budget. They increased the debt ceiling by $1.9 trillion. The national debt now stands above $13 trillion. The taxpayers lost $145 billion by bailing out Fannie and Freddie, and the CBO expects that to approach $400 billion overall.

Recently, the European Union and the International Monetary Fund pledged $145 billion to bail out the bankrupt nation of Greece. American taxpayers are on the hook for $6.8 billion in loan guarantees for the IMF. The European Union and the IMF have also announced a $1 trillion bailout plan that could put American taxpayers on the hook for $50 billion in additional loan guarantees to bail out other financially irresponsible members of the European Union. And the news today is that Spain is almost ready to go bankrupt and expects our support. Yet the ruling liberal Democrats continue to spend our Nation into a financial abyss.

I've just gone over a lot of numbers, and I want to go over them one more time to make sure the American people fully understand what these people in charge of the agenda of this Congress are doing. They have been in charge, by the way, Mr. Speaker, since January 2007, which is when most of our problems began happening. So let me go over it again: a $700 billion bailout for the megabanks, a $1.138 trillion spending bill, a $410 billion omnibus spending bill, a $3.6 trillion fiscal year 2010 budget, a $1.9 trillion debt ceiling increase, $6.8 billion to the International Monetary Fund loan guarantee program for countries in Europe—not even helping people in the United States—and an additional $50 billion in loan guarantees for bailing out other financially irresponsible members of the European Union.

Again, this bill is going to create unnecessary programs. Already under TARP I, the megabank bailout, Treasury created these programs, as Mr. MCCLINTOCK pointed out. So it's a clear indication that TARP I was a failure if the Democrats have to bring this back and create $32 billion more to do what the $700 billion TARP wasn't able to do. So what we're seeing is our friends on the other side of the aisle creating more taxpayer-funded jobs at the Federal level, not jobs for average Americans, and not money for small businesses. And yet our unemployment rate continues to stay almost at 10 percent when they have promised with the first stimulus bill that it would never go above 8 percent.

Albert Einstein is credited with defining insanity as doing the same thing over and over again and expecting different results. The American people have a right to question why our friends on the other side of the aisle are doing the same things over and over again and expecting different results from what they've gotten in the past.

With that, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. PINGREE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from North Carolina has talked a little bit about the content of this bill, and I know it will be debated at great length after we have finished the debate on this rule. But I just want to mention a couple of points from my perspective, why I am here supporting this bill today, and why I somewhat disagree on her notion that we're just doing the same thing over and over again. I am not actually doing the same thing over and over again. I am a freshman Member of Congress. Unlike my colleague, I wasn't here last year.

When the President from the former administration, President Bush, proposed the TARP to Congress, many of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle actually voted in favor of that bailout of Wall Street. Many believed it was critical to reviving our economy, just as I believed it was critical to support the Recovery Act to make sure that we did, yes, in fact, send a considerable amount of money back into our home districts, whether it was for infrastructure construction or to shore up the jobs of our teachers and firefighters, to make sure that we were continuing to build projects in our own districts, continuing to make sure that we supported our education system.

I am pleased to see that the economy is making some improvement. Now, I would be the first to say it's not improving fast enough, the jobs aren't growing fast enough in my home district. We have lost too much in our manufacturing segment. We have given too many jobs away in offshoring, and we have done so many things over the last two decades, I believe, in this country that has hurt our fundamental economy.

But I will say that what I think is different about what we are doing today and what made me very pleased when I first heard the President announce this is we are finally looking after some of our small businesses. For my year and a half in Congress, as I mentioned before, I have been meeting with small businesses, meeting with the bankers that loaned them money, holding a workshop, as I did around access to capital. I was floored with the number of people who came to that workshop, with people who drove from all over my State, even outside of my district, because they were so desperate to make sure they got more information about how to access that difficult capital, whether it was someone who was ready to start a small business, even in a tough economy; or it was someone who said to me, You know, I want to do a little expansion. I want to build my own infrastructure here while I have the opportunity, or I am just trying to survive long enough until the economy improves so my business can still be there when, I hope, things get better.

Well, I desperately hope things get better. In my home State of Maine, frankly, we hope for a very sunny summer. We hope that the tourists will be busy in our State, that the lobster fishermen will harvest a lot of lobster, that all of you will come and stay in our hotels, eat our wonderful seafood, and spend a little bit of time, maybe even purchase some real estate and build a new home. For us, that is critical. For many of our small businesses, who I hear from regularly, they still can't find the capital that they need.

We have a huge boat-building industry in our State, and we have met with the boat builders who say, The floor plan lending proposal and what we are able to access through the Small Business Administration isn't enough. Our banks aren't able to access enough capital. We sit down and meet with those very bankers that you mentioned. We meet with those bankers, many of whom are on solid footing, who give good loans to people with good credit, but they say to me, You know, we wish the SBA had a little bit more.

When you talk about the sort of government programs that don't do us any good, I just want to remind us, we are talking about the Small Business Administration. My guess is that there are a lot of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle who are very happy to go to the ribbon-cutting when a new business is opening, backed by a loan guarantee from the Small Business Administration. I am very confident that many of you meet with your bankers, and you hear your bankers say, I wish we could just access a little bit more of that support from the SBA. My guess is that many of you, while you are proclaiming that this is some kind of Democratic left-wing liberal agenda, are happy to go back to your districts and say, We want a little more SBA lending. We want to make it a little bit easier for businesses to thrive and flourish.

And somehow you get down here and this turns into a left-wing Democratic agenda because you are not interested in voting for it today. I have to say, sometimes I am completely confounded about exactly which party I am in. I feel pretty much like I am in the party of common sense. Like we are listening to our constituents, our small businesses, who everybody proudly proclaims is the backbone of the American economy. In my State, it is the backbone of our economy. We listen to them, and they say, We are still having a little trouble accessing the capital.

The President comes before us and he says, let us make sure that $30 billion goes to small business, not just Wall Street and big business, let's not just bail out the big banks, as was done under the Bush administration, let's direct this very money to our small businesses who have been asking for this for a year and a half.

I, frankly, am confounded about why anyone would vote against this, why anyone would say "no" to small businesses, why anybody would believe that this economic recession is over, that it is okay to just walk away and use all kinds of excuses about why you don't feel like voting for something anymore, why you don't want to continue helping our struggling businesses, why you don't want to continue to build jobs in this country. That is what people are desperately asking us to do, and it is my belief if we stop too soon, if we don't help our small businesses, frankly if we don't help our States that are struggling, that have loan guarantee programs themselves who have done an excellent job supporting businesses and economic growth, if we are not there to say to those entrepreneurs who have a good idea today, or who are already in business and want to expand with a creative new idea, we shouldn't be surprised that so many other economies are starting to move ahead of us in this difficult time.

Frankly, I cannot understand why anybody would not support this rule or the underlying bill. I hope that Members change their minds, think about the Small Business Administration and the small businesses we can help today, and the great good we can do to help support jobs in this country.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, I realize that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle sometimes can't understand why Republicans vote against their ill-conceived legislation, but it is really because we have a very different philosophy about what makes this country successful. We believe that we should adhere to the capitalistic society that has always made us successful. It isn't the government that makes us successful. It isn't taking money from hardworking taxpayers, sending it through government bureaucracies, and then giving a small portion of that money back to the taxpayers that has made this country successful. And this bill is very misnamed. It isn't a small business bill, it is a bailout of banks, smaller banks than the megabanks that were bailed out by the Democrats primarily, with the help of President Bush. This is not a small business bill but a bank bailout bill.

I would now like to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. PAULSEN).

Mr. PAULSEN. Mr. Speaker, I also rise today in opposition to the rule, and here is why. I offered three amendments before the Rules Committee and cosponsored a fourth. Sadly, none of them were made in order for today's bill.

My top concern and the concern of my constituents continues to be jobs. I believe everything Congress does should be looked at through the prism of is it helping or hurting job growth, and is it going to put Americans back to work. Unfortunately, Washington has not pursued a pro-jobs agenda over the last few years. In fact, since the stimulus was signed, we have lost about 3 million jobs, and we continue to spend and grow our Nation's debt to a larger and larger percentage of our GDP.

Mr. Speaker, small businesses have created about two of every three net new jobs in the United States since the early 1970s. Small businesses are also responsible for roughly half of the privately generated GDP in the United States. This is where our jobs are going to come from in the future. This is where our recovery is going to come from in the future. But what has Congress done in terms of focusing on small business? Unfortunately, not much.

That is why I offered a specific amendment in the nature of a substitute which would have allowed subchapter-S and LLCs to defer their income tax on any money that is reinvested in their company or their business. Instead, they would have to pay the tax only once on the money that is withdrawn from the company. If small businesses receive tax relief and they could reinvest that money in their company to hire workers, that would be a true economic stimulus to put people back to work.

More than two-thirds of all small business income is taxed at the top two individual tax rates, and now the majority party is going to let those rates rise at the end of this year, forcing small businesses to shoulder an even higher tax burden. So this amendment would have provided real incentives for small businesses to grow without creating another bailout-style fund of borrowing and spending even more government money.

I also offered an amendment that would have stricken the section of the legislation that would treat S-corporations differently. Why should a small business or a small business corporation be targeted for higher interest rates? A study that was sponsored by the SBA demonstrated that they already shoulder the highest effective tax burden of any business structure. If anything, they should be offered lower rates.

Finally, I cosponsored an amendment with the gentlewoman from Illinois (Mrs. BIGGERT), and it was also not made in order, and that amendment would have prevented any provisions of this legislation, the underlying bill, from taking effect until certain tax provisions that benefit small businesses are extended until 2012.

Mr. Speaker, the number one issue I really hear about is jobs, it is small business help, and how can we help them, and the uncertainty small businesses face right now coming from Congress. The Biggert amendment is a much better approach because it would have addressed that level of uncertainty, focusing time and attention on the needs and concerns of small businesses, and making sure that they know with certainty what they can do in terms of providing, where they are going to deploy their capital.

Mr. Speaker, these are the amendments that I think would have provided more direction to Congress to focus on true small business growth. It would be a targeted approach. It would have been smart. It would have been strategic. I urge a "no" vote on the rule because these amendments were not included as an option.

Ms. PINGREE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, there are other reasons why this rule and this bill deserve "no" votes. The bill lacks proper oversight for the TARP III program because it would not be subject to the effective oversight of the Special Inspector General for TARP, otherwise known as SIGTARP. I believe my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. MCCLINTOCK), pointed out some of these concerns in his remarks.

On February 19 of this year, SIGTARP's watchdog, Neil Barofsky, sent a letter to Treasury's Assistant Secretary For Financial Stability, Herb Allison. In the letter, Barofsky expressed concern regarding Treasury's decision to remove TARP III from SIGTARP's oversight and warned that such a move would be terribly wasteful and could lead to a significant exposure to waste, fraud and abuse.

If all of this weren't enough, Americans should know that TARP III creates more uncertainty. Like the original TARP megabank bailout, the Federal Government will once again, at its discretion, be able to reach into the board rooms and pocketbooks of private sectors firms and employees. The use of the original TARP by some banks begets the use of the Obama administration's pay czar and auto task force, which closed thousands of dealerships. Also, the use of the original TARP inspired the Democrats to pursue a "responsibility fee," another tax on financial firms. Through TARP III, many small and mid-sized banks may soon find the Federal Government as their new senior partner.

This approach is particularly disturbing given availability of sensible, cost-free alternatives, some of them offered by our Democratic colleagues such as Mr. KANJORSKI's bill, H.R. 3380, the Promoting Lending to America's Small Business Act which hosts a bipartisan list of 123 cosponsors, including myself.

Fortunately, the American people have a choice between the same old, tired liberal agenda or new, innovative solutions being offered by members of the GOP.

Some of the no-cost proposals offered by House Republican leadership to President Obama last December include: halting any proposed mandate or regulation expected to have an economic cost, result in job loss, or have a disparate impact on small business; eliminating job killing Federal tax increases; freezing domestic discretionary spending at last year's levels; removing unnecessary barriers to domestic energy production; providing an incentive for companies to repatriate earnings back to the United States; and increasing exports through trade agreements beneficial to domestic job creation. To that list I would add a few more items such as rescinding unspent stimulus funds, reforming the tort system to lower cost and uncertainties facing small businesses, suspending the job killing Davis-Bacon Act, and shrinking the cost of the Federal minimum wage, particularly for young and inexperienced workers seeking entry-level jobs.

Basically, Mr. Speaker, there are alternatives to the bad legislation being proposed by our colleagues on the other side of the aisle. Again, I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the rule and "no" on the underlying bill.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. PINGREE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I have to say, my colleague continues to act as though we don't have a problem out there with our economy. That somehow, as happened in the last administration, we can just take this laissez-faire attitude; we can just say it will get better on its own, we don't need to do anything or somehow this recovery has already been good enough. Well, I don't hear anybody saying it is good enough, that there is enough jobs and enough support.

I want to quote from a couple of things I recently read that reinforce this issue that there isn't enough credit and lending going on, particularly to help our small businesses who are, as I have said before, are one of the important engines to drive this economy.

A report by the U.S. Congressional Joint Economic Committee that was released in May found that small businesses have been severely hurt by the tighter lending standards that resulted from the 2008 financial crisis. I want to quote a couple of sentences from that report: The tightened credit conditions experienced by small businesses have curtailed their ability to meet payroll or produce the products and services that are in demand. In 2009, small business hiring was 20 percent below its 2001–2007 average.

As further evidence of the impact that tight credit markets are having on small businesses, hiring in mid sized and larger establishments has been increasing since the middle of 2009 while small business hiring continues to decline. I don't know how much more evidence we need than what we hear every weekend, but it is clear small businesses in our districts are still struggling.

There was some question about whether or not the bankers even wanted this to happen, whether banks already had plenty of money to lend, people were just not showing up to take it. I want to read a letter from the Independent Community Bankers of America. They say: This act would offer capital to interested community banks to use to increase small business credit. It goes on to say: Notably, leveraging the $30 billion in funds with community banks would potentially support many times that in loan volume to small businesses, as much as $300 billion in additional lending.

Well, I don't know anyone who analyzes our businesses out there who says it wouldn't be good to have more credit, more availability, more lending, more growth in our businesses. We haven't been going on that path, we haven't been growing fast enough, and we haven't done a sufficient amount to support availability of credit and growth in our small businesses.

Now we have done, according to this report, a fair amount for some of our bigger or mid-sized businesses, but yet we are always the ones who say, and now I am going to quote from Professor Campbell Harvey of Duke University, his quote, "Small and medium-sized firms are the drivers of employment growth in the economy, and they are being squeezed." He went on to say, "Results show an extraordinary 44 percent of small businesses restricted their capital spending below desired levels because of borrowing difficulties. These capital projects create jobs both today and over the longer term." He concludes by saying, "Analysis suggests we need to refocus our efforts on the root of the problem. Businesses are not spending on capital projects because of borrowing difficulties. Fixing the credit problem goes a long way toward creating the conditions for robust employment growth."

We can talk around this all we want, but it's a relatively simple problem that we have all known about ever since this economy started going bad. Banks tightened up on their lending. There hasn't been enough credit availability. Businesses have been struggling. Many of them just want to hang on. Some of them actually want to grow.

And here is Professor Harvey telling us, "Results show an extraordinary 44 percent of small businesses restricted their capital spending below desired levels because of borrowing difficulties." Borrowing difficulties, that's almost half of small business reporting this, borrowing difficulties mean they can't get enough money to borrow. They want to borrow money. These are legitimate businesses, many with good credit ratings, who just can't get enough out there.

And here are the bankers saying to us, yeah, this would put potentially $300 billion in additional lending into our economy at a time when we are just starting to chug forward, where people are just starting to feel a little bit hopeful, where consumer credit is going up just a little bit, but we are not doing enough.

It's easy to stand back and say, oh, no, no, this isn't the government's job. But remember what happened before we started assisting in this terrible recession. We were going nowhere. We were losing a tremendous amount of jobs.

I don't like spending this money any more than anybody else, no matter what my colleagues on the other side of the aisle may say. Nobody likes to increase the deficit or feel we are spending more money. But are we really going to turn our backs on our small businesses and on our community banks when they are saying to us, Almost half of us are having trouble accessing the credit we need? Couldn't you just give us a helping hand?

We helped out Wall Street. We helped out the big financial institutions. Now, we finally have a bill before us to help the backbone of our businesses and we are going to say "no."

I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, what we need, again, are across-the-board tax cuts. We don't need more government control. It's interesting to me that our colleagues have two different tacks. One is blame everything on the previous administration. But the next to the last Democrat who spoke during 1-minute made a speech telling us about how everything was great and how much better everything is going. So it's a little hard, I am sure, for the American people to wonder what is the policy of this group that's in charge of the Congress.

I now would like to yield 2 minutes to my distinguished colleague from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN).

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlelady from North Carolina for yielding me this time. I don't think I will take that much time.

Each workday every Member of Congress receives a publication called Congress Daily. A few months ago, the Congress Daily had a cartoon which showed the President and his Secretary of the Treasury hollering out, "Loan, loan, loan." And then it showed the banks with huge bags full of money, and then local examiners pulling back saying, "No, no, no." And that is the crux of the problem. The banks have plenty of money to loan, but they have got the examiners at the local level saying, "No, no, no."

And this is something that both administrations have agreed on, because President Bush and his Secretary of the Treasury started this back before President Obama even came into office, urging the banks to make more loans to small businesses. But they can't do it because the examiners have turned down almost every kind of loan that they wanted to make except to people who didn't need loans.

Just the weekend before last I had a banker in east Tennessee tell me that they had turned down a $5.5 million loan. They have plenty of money to loan, but they knew the examiners would turn this down. A few months ago, the chairman of the BB&T banking chain, one of the most respected banks in this country, told a group of us that it was breaking his heart because they had plenty of money to loan, but they were having to destroy people's businesses, turning down loans that at any other time they would have made.

So we will never really correct this problem until we get the top banking regulators to get on their examiners on the local level to start giving some businesses some flexibility and start making some loans. Not only do the banks tell me this, they are in a catch-22 position. They can't complain publicly because then the examiners would come down even harder on them. But they are telling me this, and then all the small business people from all types of businesses are telling me they can't get the loans because the examiners are saying, "No, no, no."

Ms. PINGREE of Maine. I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, as my colleague has pointed out, there are lots of different perspectives from our folks on the other side of the aisle. They change the line of talking to depend on what it is they want to point out.

I want to say again that we have major problems with our economy. We have a problem with spending. Not a problem with revenue, but a problem with spending. And I want to point out some comments and contrast positions from when our colleagues were in the minority to now.

In May of 2006, then-Minority Leader PELOSI declared, quote, "Our national debt is a national security issue. Countries that own our debt will not only be making our toys, our clothes, and our computers, pretty soon they will be making our foreign policy. They have far too much leverage over us." Keep in mind that, at the time she said this, the total public debt outstanding was $8.351 trillion. Now, when they have created a debt of over $13 trillion, suddenly it's not a problem.

Or in December 2005 when she declared, quote, "Democrats support pay-as-you-go. No deficit spending. If something is important to you, figure out how to pay for it, but do not make my grandchildren and children have to pay for it, or anybody's children and grandchildren have to pay for it." Again, keep in mind that, at the time she said this, the debt was $8.107 trillion. Now, when they've created a debt of over $13 trillion, they seem not to be concerned about their children and grandchildren.

The ruling liberal Democrats' pride in their fiscal irresponsibility is also a far cry from March 2005, when Minority Whip HOYER expressed outrage, declaring that, quote, "On the Republican Party's watch, the Federal Government recorded the worst budget deficit in American history, $412 billion in fiscal year 2004. $412 billion of deficit spending . . . We ought to be ashamed of that. We ought to be ashamed to tell our children that that's what we have done to them. We ought to be ashamed to tell our grandchildren, of which I have three, that that is what we have done to them and their generation. That is the height of fiscal irresponsibility, and I suggest it is also a fiscally immoral act and is the abuse of our children and grandchildren and generations yet to come, who in their time will face a challenge perhaps like Iraq, perhaps like AIDS, perhaps a tsunami or other natural disaster, and they will look around for resources to respond to their crisis in their time and say, oh, my goodness, the resources were spent by this Congress and by the previous Congress. What a shame."

So, apparently under Republican rule, a $412 billion deficit was considered a threat to our descendants, but a $1.42 trillion deficit under Democrats is somehow excused for some reason. What a shame indeed.

Mr. Speaker, when the liberal Democrats seized control of Congress in January of 2007, the number of unemployed persons stood at 7 million and the unemployment rate was 4.6 percent. Oh, how times have changed. Today, the numbers are more than double. Fifteen million Americans unemployed, resulting in a staggering 9.7 percent unemployment rate.

Strange how these immutable numbers from the same nonpartisan official government source tell a different story than the liberal Democrats in desperate search of a scapegoat would have you to believe.

Mr. Speaker, we do not need to continue to borrow money and put our children and grandchildren into greater debt. The evidence is in. The liberal Democrat agenda has failed. They need to go back to the drawing board and come back to the American people with real solutions to their real problems.

And do we hear from small business people? Do we hear from people who are out of work? Absolutely. Every weekend. This isn't the time to dither and blame the Republican minority for the disappointing collapse of governance we've seen since the liberal majority seized control in 2007.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. PINGREE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few things in conclusion.

We have debated a little bit today about whether or not this bill is important, and I just want to say this is a critical need that we are fulfilling today. This bill will support small businesses when they need it most—access to the financing they need to survive, to grow, to expand and create the jobs that will drive our economic recovery.

I don't really know how anyone could oppose this. I know this is essential because I hear it from businesses throughout the 125 towns in my district, and I know this is essential because I have owned a business myself for much of my adult life. For many years, I owned a knitting company that sold our products around the country.

I grew the business, and eventually employed 10 people in a town of just 350 year-round residents. And like many women who start their own businesses, I know what it is to argue with a banker to get more access to credit, to start your business or expand your business on a credit card, or to have to go to your husband to cosign on a loan.

Now I own an inn and a restaurant that uses vegetables grown on our island and locally caught seafood, and I still know what it is to meet a payroll and argue with the bank about borrowing the money to expand.

Mr. Speaker, I have been lucky to own a business that's been an important part of my own community, but it never would have been able to survive without cooperative bankers in my community or access to the investment that the business needed to grow.

When businesses are coming to us and saying this is their problem, how could we possibly tell them no? And when facing a tough economic crisis like this one, it is vital that we do everything in our power to support the small businesses that create 64 percent of new jobs in this country, that comprise more than 99 percent of all employer companies, and that are the backbone of the communities that most of us live in.

This bill is an important step in supporting those small businesses, ensuring that they have the necessary capital to stay in business and to expand as the economy recovers. This bill is more than just simply an investment in small business. Frankly, it is an investment in American job growth. And what could be more important at this moment in time?

I urge a "yes" vote on the previous question and on the rule.

I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOYLE). The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will postpone further proceedings today on motions to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote incurs objection under clause 6 of rule XX.

RECOGNIZING CONTRIBUTIONS OF FATHERS

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from California.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I request 5 legislative days during which Members may revise and extend and insert extraneous material on H. Res. 1389 into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 1389, to honor and celebrate Father's Day this Sunday and to recognize the involvement of our Nation's fathers in their children's lives. This resolution recognizes the special bond between father and child by celebrating the significant and positive impacts a present, supportive, and involved father has on their child and the entire family.

Every year on the third Sunday in June, families across the country take time out to celebrate the dad in the family. New fathers and experienced fathers alike are honored for the hard work and deep love it takes to be a supportive father. Whether it be through a home-cooked meal, a card, or even a simple phone call, we stop once a year to thank fathers for everything they do in our lives.

Unfortunately, 25 million children in America today are living apart from their biological fathers. This means that one out of every three children grow up without their biological father present in their lives.

Fathers play a significant and influential role in their child's development. When supportive fathers are involved in their children's lives, their children are more likely to enjoy learning, earn better grades, and participate in extracurricular activities. We celebrate the fathers who are positive role models for their children.

By commemorating the hard work and dedication of fathers on Father's Day, we encourage responsible fatherhood and happy, successful, and stronger families and communities.

With that, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in support of the resolution before us, House Resolution 1389, recognizing the immeasurable contributions of fathers in the healthy development of children, supporting responsible fatherhood, and encouraging greater involvement of fathers in the lives of their children, especially on Father's Day, and really on every day.

Children with involved, caring fathers have improved educational outcomes compared with children whose fathers are absent. A number of studies suggest that fathers who are involved, nurturing, and playful with their infants have children with higher IQs, as well as better linguistic and cognitive capacities. Toddlers with involved fathers go on to start school with higher levels of academic readiness. They are more patient and can handle the stresses and frustrations associated with schooling more readily than children with less involved fathers.

The influence of a father's involvement on academic achievement extends into adolescence and young adulthood. For instance, a U.S. Department of Education study found that highly involved biological fathers had children who were 43 percent more likely than other children to earn mostly As and 33 percent less likely than other children to repeat a grade.

Fathers play a significant role in shaping the character of their children. By spending time with their sons and daughters, being stern yet fair disciplinarians, and listening to their experiences, fathers mold and shape children into the men and women they will become. They instill important values and prepare their children for the challenges and opportunities ahead by demonstrating true leadership.

On Father's Day and every day, we honor our fathers and celebrate the special bond between a father and a child. I rise today in support of this resolution and ask my colleagues to do the same.

I yield such time as he may consume to my colleague from east Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN).

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin for yielding me this time.

I come in support of this resolution because of a very meaningful time that I spent as a judge in Tennessee. I spent 7 and a half years as a criminal court judge before coming to Congress, trying the felony criminal cases, the most serious cases. I've never forgotten that the first day I was a judge, Gary Tullock, the chief probation counselor for 16 counties in east Tennessee, told me that 98 percent of the defendants in felony cases came from what he referred to as broken homes. He was not exactly right on that. It was not quite 98 percent, but it was well over 90 percent that came from father-absent households, and that's the key.

I went through over 10,000 cases in the time that I was judge because 97 or 98 percent of the people in felony cases in criminal court plead guilty and then apply for probation, and I would get 8- or 10- or 12-page reports into their family and work background and so forth.

And every day for 7 and a half years, I would read, Defendant's father left home when defendant was 2 and never returned; defendant's father left home to get a pack of cigarettes and never came back. When you read that thousands of times over several years, it really makes an impression.

I know that many wonderful and many outstanding people have come from broken homes and even from father-absent households, but it's an amazing statistic that the gentlewoman from California gave a few minutes ago when she said that one out of every three children in America are living apart from their biological fathers now.

We need to get a message across some way, especially to the young men of this country, that marriage is very, very important and that the role of fatherhood is very, very important and that it is harmful to a great many young people when a father leaves and removes himself from the raising of a child. A child is really blessed to have two loving parents, and certainly we all know and appreciate the very, very important role of mothers, but the role of fathers is important as well and not just for young men.

I have read in the past that many prostitutes and many women who get in trouble have had abusive or very negative or bad relationships with their fathers. So it's important to young girls as well, but it is especially important to young boys.

The root of the crime problem in this country is father-absent households. Drugs and alcohol are involved in most crimes, but they are secondary to the problem of father-absent households. Where fathers have left the lives, we need to encourage mothers to get boys into Boy Scouts or find other good male role models within the family or within the neighborhood, and we need to encourage more men to teach in elementary schools and lead Boy Scout troops and do things like that because, unfortunately, millions of young boys are growing up without a good male role model in their lives.

I remember several years ago driving to the airport one Friday afternoon after we had finished our session, and there had been a school shooting out in I think Oregon. They had the national head of the YMCA on the national CBS news, and he said children are being neglected in this country like never before. I hope that's not true, but that is what he said. And it is a growing problem, and this resolution I hope will call attention to the great importance of fathers in the lives of their children, especially as we approach Father's Day.

Ms. WOOLSEY. I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PETRI. I yield such time as he may consume to my colleague from Pennsylvania, JOE PITTS.

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H. Res. 1389, and I commend my colleague Mr. MCINTYRE for sponsoring this resolution.

We often hear about deadbeat and delinquent dads. So it's easy to forget that millions of dads across America are striving to be good husbands and positive role models for their kids. It is important for us to recognize those dads and the tremendous importance of promoting fatherhood in America.

There's no denying the invaluable role that a father plays in a child's life. We all know that children with involved and loving fathers have a significant advantage. They tend to perform better in school, to have a healthy self-esteem, to exhibit positive social behavior, and avoid drug use and other criminal activity. But this kind of statistical research really just affirms what we already know to be true: Fatherhood is important. A loving father plays an integral role in the family, and healthy families are the foundation for a healthy society.

This is not a partisan issue, and I'm glad that Republicans and Democrats are joining together on this bipartisan effort to honor responsible fatherhood. Small communities across our country rely on the work of families to keep our neighborhoods strong. Churches, community service clubs, and school boards should remember how critical fathers are in creating stable families and, therefore, stable communities.

I urge my colleagues to recognize the importance of fatherhood and to support this resolution, H. Res. 1389, today.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I urge support for the resolution before us, have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I personally have the great privilege to have raised two sons, Ed Critchett and Michael Woolsey, and I have a son-in-law, Mark Pauline, who are the most wonderful fathers on this earth. I am so proud of them, and I just thought I'd take this moment right now to be able to express that.

Their children, my grandchildren, Teddy and Julia, Jake-Eddie, Carlo and Luca are great kids, but they are all the better because they have such great dads.

So, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support H. Res. 1389, honoring and celebrating Father's Day and recognizing the involvement of our Nation's fathers in their children's lives.

With that, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. MCINTYRE).

Mr. MCINTYRE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 1389, a resolution that recognizes the immeasurable contributions of fathers in the healthy development of children, supports responsible fatherhood, and encourages greater involvement of fathers in the lives of their children, especially with the celebration of Father's Day coming up this weekend.

On June 20, our Nation will celebrate the special place that fathers have in our country. From helping with homework to playing ball to reading a book to offering advice and support or to just listening and spending time with children, each and every day fathers of all ages contribute to the mental, moral, spiritual, and physical development of children, teenagers and, yes, adults.

According to the National Fatherhood Initiative, children with involved, loving fathers are significantly more likely to do well in school, have a healthy self-esteem, exhibit empathy and good behavior, and avoid high-risk activities, such as drug use and even criminal activity.

H. Res. 1389 recognizes the commitment of fathers and the wonderful work that both parents do on behalf of their kids, and I encourage my colleagues to join us as we all recommit ourselves to being the best fathers that we can be and honoring our fathers and grandfathers everywhere.

In conclusion, I would like to publicly thank my own father, Dr. Douglas C. McIntyre, for the great example he has been to me throughout my life and for the dedication and support he has shown in my every endeavor. Indeed, may we all intend and exemplify the type of example that we would want our own children to one day exhibit when they may have that opportunity to be a father.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a "yes" vote on this important bill.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer my support for H. Res. 1389, and for fathers across the Nation. Nearly 50 years ago, Daniel Patrick Moynihan warned that, "... A community that allows a large number of young men to grow up in broken families ... never acquiring any stable relationship to male authority, never acquiring any rational expectations about the future—that community asks for and gets chaos." Moynihan's words hold a prophetic ring as we look at society today.

Fathers play a critical role in the development of their children, positively influencing everything from academic performance to mental and physical health. Children who do not live with both parents are more likely to repeat a grade, have lower grades, be diagnosed with a mental illness, experience drug or alcohol abuse problems, and commit violent crimes.

I do not mean to imply that those who grow up without both parents are doomed to failure, nor am I suggesting that children from two-parent homes are guaranteed success. But the presence of fathers in the lives of their children does have benefits that cannot be denied. This Congress, and America as a whole, are right to take time to honor the men who took responsibility for their actions, who invest in the lives of their children, who sacrifice their own wants and desires for the sake of future generations. So I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H. Res. 1389 as it is considered today.

I would also like to take this opportunity to express my appreciation for the sacrifices made by my own father, Wilbur Tiaht. His sacrificial leadership, during his service in the Army Air Corps during World War II, and as a father and husband has provided a tremendous example for me and my siblings. I am grateful for the blessing that he has been to me and my family, and each Father's Day, I am reminded of how fortunate I am to still have him with me.

Ms. JACKSON LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H. Res. 1389, "Recognizing the immeasurable contributions of fathers in the healthy development of children, supporting responsible fatherhood, and encouraging greater involvement of fathers in the lives of their children, especially on Father's Day."

This resolution commends the millions of fathers who serve as wonderful, caring parents for their children. It simultaneously calls on fathers across the United States (1) reconnect and rededicate themselves to their children's lives; and (2) express their love and support for their children, not only on Father's Day, but everyday.

Fathers all over the United States are involved in their children's lives in multitude ways that go beyond the traditional roles of economic provider. Fathers are also involved by having direct contact with their children, engagement; making themselves available to their children even when they are not in physical contact, accessibility; and taking responsibility for their children's care and welfare, again regardless of physical proximity, responsibility. For this reason and many others, I salute the millions of fathers who have embraced the attributes of fatherhood.

However, this piece of legislation also recognizes the need for fathers to take their place in their children's lives and become more involved. The statistics on children without an active father in their lives are alarming:

63 percent of youth suicides are from fatherless homes (U.S. Department Of Health/Census)—5 times the average

90 percent of all homeless and runaway children are from fatherless homes—32 times the average

85 percent of all children who show behavior disorders come from fatherless homes—20 times the average. (Center for Disease Control)

80 percent of rapists with anger problems come from fatherless homes—14 times the average. (Justice & Behavior, Vol 14, p. 403–26)

71 percent of all high school dropouts come from fatherless homes—9 times the average. (National Principals Association Report)

75 percent of all adolescent patients in chemical abuse centers come from fatherless homes—10 times the average. (Rainbows for All God's Children)

70 percent of youths in State-operated institutions come from fatherless homes—9 times the average. (U.S. Department of Justice, Sept. 1988)

85 percent of all youths in prison come from fatherless homes—20 times the average. (Fulton Co. Georgia, Texas Department of Correction)

Clearly, fathers represent a lot more than just a paycheck to a child; they represent safety, protection, guidance, friendship, and someone to look up to. This resolution urges men to understand the level of responsibility fathering a child requires, especially in the encouragement of the mental, moral, social, academic, emotional, physical, and spiritual development of children.

In conclusion, not only is this issue imperative to the development of the future of America's youth, but also to the prosperity of the country as a whole. I am diligently seeking ways to bring families back together and this resolution can be the catalyze to promote such unity; by promoting fathers who already exemplify these qualities.

I must pay tribute to my own father Ezra C. Jackson. I thank him for being a father to my brother Michael and me. For also being a grandfather to our children. He was God-fearing, funny and a great mentor to young men who were not his children. Thank you Dad for being in my life, although you are no longer with us—your guidance will always be appreciated.

Ms. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 1389, which recognizes the important role that fathers play in the lives of their children. While Father's Day is celebrated once a year, the responsibility of being a father never ceases.

According to U.S. Census Bureau data from 2009, over 24 million children live apart from their biological fathers. That is 1 out of every 3 children in the United States. Nearly 2 out of every 3 African American children live apart from their biological fathers. While we honor biological fathers, we should also remember the many men that serve as father figures in the lives of children across the country. These truly special individuals consist of grandfathers, uncles, adoptive fathers, step-fathers, and anyone else who provides a parenting role. No one requires them to assume this responsibility, but they do so selflessly and without complaint.

Children with involved fathers are less likely to have behavioral problems, abuse drugs, and live in poverty. A child with an involved father is more likely to stay in school, go to college, and be successful later in life. Clearly, the presence of father figures in homes across the country is absolutely critical to the healthy development of our young people.

We also owe special recognition to the single fathers in California's 37th District and across the country. These fathers work longer and harder to ensure that their children have the resources and care they need to experience a fulfilling childhood and to grow into well-rounded adults. Many of these single fathers work extra hours just to put food on the table and meet their children's needs.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, we should pay tribute to the fathers who are unable to be with their children this Father's Day. These individuals include the men serving overseas in our military, fathers that are working to provide for their families, fathers that are incarcerated, and fathers that live far away from their children.

Will Rogers, Jr. once said that his "heritage to his children wasn't words or possessions, but an unspoken treasure, the treasure of his example as a man and a father." This sentiment perfectly sums up the importance of fathers and their role in the lives of our nation's youth.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H. Res. 1389 and recognizing the important role that fathers play in their children's lives.

Mr. JOHNSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my support for H. Res. 1389, which recognizes the importance of fathers to the development of children, support responsible fatherhood, and encourage fathers to be involved in the lives of their children.

This Father's Day, we should all contemplate the great value of conscientious fatherhood. Healthy relationships with their fathers help children to grow into confident, successful adults. Thus, the actions of each of America's millions of fathers have a direct impact on the future of our nation.

Aside from all of the intangible benefits to children of strong connections with their fathers or father figures, there is also significant evidence that shows the much-improved likelihood of success in school and society of those children whose fathers actively support them and provide a positive example for them.

I want to read a quote from author Kent Nerburn, who wrote that there is a certain "sense of honor that makes a man want to be more than he is and to pass something good and hopeful into the hands of his son." I encourage all American fathers to take this charge into their hearts, on this Father's Day and every day.

I urge my colleagues to support this important resolution.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to congratulate Congressman MCINTYRE as the author of this piece of legislation.

With that, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 1389.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 1414

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from California.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I request 5 legislative days during which Members may revise and extend and insert extraneous materials on H. Res. 1414 into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 1414, which honors and congratulates Urban Prep Charter Academy for Young Men in Englewood, Illinois and all 107 members of its first graduating class for achieving a 100 percent college acceptance rate.

Students in America often face extraordinary challenges to completing high school. In our Nation's 50 largest cities, only 53 percent of students are graduating from high school on time. In the Chicago Public School District in particular, African American males are dropping out at a rate of over 50 percent, and only one in 40 of those who finish high school are graduating from college.

The students at the Englewood campus of the Urban Prep Charter Academy for Young Men have bucked these national and local trends, Mr. Speaker. Their very first graduating class achieved a 100 percent college acceptance rate and will enroll in more than 80 different colleges and universities this fall. The graduates of Urban Prep displayed remarkable academic achievement and community engagement and received nearly $4 million in college scholarships and grants.

When nationally only 28 percent of African American male high school graduates are enrolling in college, the 100 percent acceptance rate at Urban Prep-Englewood is a remarkable accomplishment for these students, their families, and the community, as well as for the faculty and staff of Urban Prep-Englewood. The graduates serve as role models for their community and remind us that we must do more to increase America's college attendance if we are to succeed in a 21st-century economy.

Mr. Speaker, once again, I express my support for H. Res. 1414 and congratulate the seniors of the Urban Prep Charter Academy for Young Men for their academic achievement and college acceptance. I want to thank Representative BOBBY RUSH for bringing this resolution to the floor, and I urge my colleagues to pass the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RUSH).

Mr. RUSH. I want to thank the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) for yielding time.

I also want to thank Chairman MILLER, Ranking Member KLINE, and Majority Leader HOYER for working with my office in order to bring this important resolution to the floor today.

Mr. Speaker, today, we have the chance to vote on a very important congressional resolution, congratulating Urban Prep Charter Academy for Young Men-Englewood Campus, which is the Nation's first all-male charter high school, for achieving a 100 percent college acceptance rate for all 107 members of its first graduating class of 2010. There have been over $4 million in grants and scholarships awarded to this one class, which is the first of its kind in the Nation.

At a time when only 50 percent of African American males are graduating from high school in most large, urban, predominantly black school districts, the young graduates of Urban Prep are not only shattering the stereotypes that have surrounded the issue of black male dropouts, but they are also setting a standard and are establishing a model that we hope will be replicated in other school districts all around this Nation. The accomplishments that these students, teachers, administrators, and families of this esteemed high school, Urban Prep, have achieved are extremely important, not only to my district and to the African American community, but to the Nation at large.

The Englewood district, where Urban Prep is located, has been better known for its high rates of unemployment and for its lack of opportunity, which has led to an infestation of drugs, violence, and gang activity in recent years. Today, Urban Prep stands as a national symbol of academic excellence, and within the Englewood community, the school represents pride, hope, and inspiration.

There are countless hardworking and resilient Englewood families who have the same aspirations and desires for their children that you and I and the rest of the Members of this body carry, which is to obtain quality educations and to have the opportunity to build better lives for themselves.

Mr. Speaker, as a former member of the Englewood High School Transition Advisory Council, I can recall working with Tim King, the founder, president and CEO of Urban Prep Academy, back in 2005, trying to get the Urban Prep charter approved through the Chicago Public Schools. I believed so strongly in Tim King and in his vision for building a strong, successful school in the Englewood community which would serve as a model for outstanding academic achievement and which would establish a solid foundation in the community that would make us all proud.

We received a lot of pushback from the Chicago Board of Education and even from the community as they did not believe that we could be successful in teaching our young African American males on a level rivaling any rich, affluent district in the Nation. Well, Mr. Speaker, the first graduating class has shown, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that Urban Prep is for real, that black males will learn, and that nothing is impossible if you are willing to dream and to work to make that dream come true.

A 2009 study by the American Council on Education reported that only 28 percent of African American males who graduate from high school go on to enroll in college, compared with 41 percent of all other students. Well, again, Urban Prep graduates have shattered both of those records. With their hard work, with their commitment, with their dedication, and with their expectation of high standards among their parents, teachers and overall community, they are proving again that nothing is impossible.

I am extremely proud of what Urban Prep has been able to accomplish over the last 5 years. That includes not only the students but also their families, teachers, staff, and of course, the leadership of Tim King, who is an outstanding young man and whose father I know quite well. For the sake of a strong national economy as well as for a more stabilized community around the world, we need more educated, strong, black male role models and black male leaders.

All of the students, all of their parents, all of their supporters, and all of their friends who are watching this debate today, I say to you: Congratulations on all of your hard work. You have been an inspiration to your country. May God continue to guide you and to bless you in all of your future endeavors.

The motto of Urban Prep is “We Believe.”

Mr. Speaker, I attended their graduation last Saturday. I saw all of these young men in their graduation regalia, young men who were coming from different backgrounds—backgrounds of depravation and poverty—who have been able to transform and to transcend those barriers. I saw them walk across the stage to receive their diplomas. Not only, Mr. Speaker, are they graduating with high school diplomas, but every last one of them has a scholarship to a 4-year college in America—to Georgetown, to Howard, to Morehouse, to the University of Illinois. All across this Nation, Urban Prep is sending its graduates to represent my community, this community, and this Nation. Some of them—most of them—will be successful. They are the leaders of tomorrow.

I would like to submit the commencement program book “The First Commencement Exercises” for the Urban Prep Charter Academy for Young Men—Englewood Campus, for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to be added to my remarks on the same given previously.

We have a responsibility to our families, community, and world.

We are our brothers’ keepers.

We believe in ourselves.

We believe in each other.

We believe in Urban Prep.

WE BELIEVE.

THE HISTORY OF URBAN PREP

Urban Prep Academies is a nonprofit organization founded in 2002 by Tim King and a group of African-American education, business, and civic leaders. Urban Prep’s mission is to provide a comprehensive, high-quality college preparatory education to young men that results in graduates succeeding in college. We opened our first school, Urban Prep Charter Academy for Young Men—Englewood Campus, in 2006. Urban Prep’s Englewood Campus is the country’s first public charter high school for boys. In 2009, we opened our second school, Urban Prep Charter Academy for Young Men—East Garfield Park. Our third school, Urban Prep Charter Academy for Young Men—South Shore opens in the fall of 2010. The Urban Prep motto is “We Believe.” Our motto is a constant reminder that Urban Prep students will not fall into the trap of negative stereotypes and low expectations. Instead, Urban Prep students believe in their potential and believe in their ability to exceed that potential. The Urban Prep family (teachers, administrators, staff, board of directors, community members and donors) also believes in these young men, and in our important and lasting role in their lives. At Urban Prep, We Believe.

URBAN PREP TRADITIONS, RELICS, & RITUALS

Urban Prep Mace

The tradition of a ceremonial mace began in Britain as early as the 14th century. In the U.S., a mace has been used in the House of Representatives since our country’s founding. Today, almost all colleges and universities have a mace, which is carried at important institutional ceremonies. The Urban Prep mace was designed by Paul King III of Chicago, Illinois and carved from mahogany by architectural wood-turner Tom Boley of Red Oak Hollow in Purcellville, Virginia. It stands almost four feet tall, and is topped by a walnut medallion engraved with the Urban Prep Crest. Walnut collars, engraved with the school name, motto and founding date, also adorn the mace.

Urban Prep Creed

The Urban Prep Creed, developed by the faculty, administration and staff, articulates the schools’ values, ideals and the goals we expect our students to meet and exceed; including going to college, taking responsibility for their actions, achieving academically, persevering, and living honorably. Students collectively recite the Creed daily during Community and at all Urban Prep formal events. The Creed starts and ends with the Urban Prep motto, “We Believe.”

Credimus Book

The Credimus Book contains the register of Urban Prep graduates and the colleges they will attend. Seniors sign their names into the book as a pledge of their intention to succeed in college during a ceremony at Urban Prep’s College Signing Day event. At Commencement, the book is passed from the graduating class to representatives from the rising senior class. Passing on the relic symbolizes how the graduates’ success will inspire future generations to work diligently that they may one day too etch their names unto its pages.

The Passing of the Book Ceremony

At Commencement, the Credimus Book is passed from the graduating class to representatives of the Junior class. Once the book has been passed, the graduating class recites a pledge of support to the rising seniors: We are the graduates of Urban Prep, and We Believe. We Believe that our present lays the pathway for your future. We Believe that in action and in word, we are our brothers’ keepers. We Believe that you will carry-on the tradition of excellence we pass to you today. We Believe that one year from now, you will reunite with us in college. We Believe that you are now the leaders of Urban Prep. We are the graduates of Urban Prep, and We Believe in you. Both the spoken pledge and the book-passing symbolize the perpetual bonds of brotherhood that unite all Urban Prep students and alumni.

Urban Prep Crest, Colors & Mascot

Like the heraldic coats-of-arms that inspired it, Urban Prep’s crest is rife with symbolism. The lions, Urban Prep’s mascot, evoke leadership and strength. The crowned lions face outward, independently focused on the future; but their tails entwine, illustrating brotherhood and solidarity. An open book is shown beneath them, symbolizing our foundation in academics. The eight-pointed star between the lions signifies Urban Prep’s eight core values. The eight points’ circular arrangement represents how Urban Prep’s four ‘arc’ programs encircle students in a caring school community. The Crest also contains our name, founding date, and motto—Credimus, the Latin for We Believe. The crest is styled in our school colors, red and gold. Red symbolizes the shared blood of brothers. Gold symbolizes the material riches available to college graduates, as well as the personal and spiritual reward of enlightenment through education. The Urban Prep Crest was designed by Nick Zembruski of Chicago, Illinois in 2006.

Ms. EDWARDS of Maryland. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of this resolution to congratulate the Urban Prep Charter Academy on the wonderful accomplishment of sending every one of their 107 graduates on to college this year. For some students, getting an education is a simple feat, but for many students in our urban centers, that is not true, and this is the focus community, the population, that is served by Urban Prep.

Now, I knew Urban Prep some time ago. Their motto is "We Believe." I want to say here that I believe in Urban Prep and in the phenomenal work that they do to reverse troubling graduation and completion rates among African American men in Chicago's urban centers. We can learn many lessons from the Urban Prep experiment, and indeed, that experiment is being looked at across the country, even in communities like the one I represent in Maryland's Fourth Congressional District.

I know firsthand that the caliber of educators at Urban Prep plays an important role in the lives of their students. I want to speak today about one of those educators because in no one is this more prevalent than in Urban Prep's Dr. Derrick Brooms.

Dr. Brooms is an amazing and dynamic educator, mentor, and high school teacher who makes history come alive. He is a Ph.D. recipient from the University of Chicago, the director of athletics at Urban Prep, and he was a mentor to my son and to one of my staff members when he lived right here in Prince George's County, in Maryland, when he taught and coached at the Field School.

Dr. Brooms was excited to join the start-up Urban Prep because he wanted to mentor African American men to their fullest potential. He is just one of the many reasons Urban Prep is able to create an environment that not only educates but that also teaches students the importance of striving for success and in contributing to our communities.

Mr. Speaker, I join Mr. RUSH in wholeheartedly supporting this resolution and in the shared belief that this country needs more educators like those at Urban Prep, educators like Dr. Derrick Brooms, and that the country needs more schools like the Urban Prep Charter Academy.

Now, for some of our young people, for some of our young African American men, education can come from a charter school or it can come from a private school. For the overwhelming majority of them, it can come from a regular public school. Yet the fact is, if we are to succeed as a nation, we have to begin to educate some of our most vulnerable and most challenging communities, and that is exactly what Urban Prep does. It doesn't matter what the school is. It matters that it educates our young people.

So I salute the 107 graduates of Urban Prep who aren't going to just finish high school but who are going to go on to college and who are going to make a contribution to their communities in the way that so many of their mentors have made contributions to them.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise today in support of the resolution before us, House Resolution 1414, congratulating Urban Prep Charter Academy for Young Men-Englewood campus for achieving 100 percent college acceptance rate for all 107 members of its first graduating class of 2010.

In 2002, a group of motivated African American civic, business, and educational leaders, organized by former Hales Franciscan High School president Tim King, determined to establish a new high school in Chicago focused on providing a strong college-preparatory high school option for boys in underserved African American communities. African American males have been and continue to be the lowest performing demographic in Chicago's public schools. A recent University of Chicago study published in 2006 reported that only one in 40 African American boys in Chicago public schools eventually graduates from a 4-year university.

The Chicago Board of Education approved Urban Prep Academy's charter application in 2005, and Urban Prep opened its first school, Urban Prep Charter Academy for Young Men-Englewood campus, the subsequent September. It is the first charter high school for boys in the country and currently enrolls 550 students in grades nine through 12. Urban Prep's second school opened in the East Garfield Park community in 2009, and the third will open this fall in the South Shore community.

The mission at Urban Prep Academies is to provide a comprehensive, high-quality, college-preparatory education to young men that results in graduates succeeding in college. Urban Prep's first graduating class, the class of 2010, is well on its way to fulfilling the school's mission. The entire graduating class has been accepted to more than 80 colleges and universities and will receive nearly $4 million in scholarships and grants.

The students' 8-hour day consists of a heavy math and science course load, an emphasis on studying a foreign language, plus two periods of English every day. In addition, students spend more than an hour a day with a mentor. The school fosters an environment where students can thrive. Failure is not an option.

A 100 percent college acceptance rate is clearly phenomenal. The Urban Prep Academy students should be commended for all their hard work and ability to beat the odds.

In addition, today we recognize Tim King, the president and CEO, the faculty and staff for providing these students with the support and encouragement they needed to succeed. I support this resolution and ask my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support H. Res. 1414, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 1414, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I request 5 legislative days during which Members may revise and extend and insert extraneous material on H. Res. 1322 into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of the important role of science, technology, engineering and math—known as STEM—educators in our schools and in our country. The Albert Einstein Distinguished Educator Fellowship Program recognizes kindergarten through 12th grade teachers as critical voices in the national conversation on education policy. The program acknowledges excellence in teaching and the value of a teacher's service to the community.

This program brings outstanding teachers to the Washington, D.C. area so they can be immersed in and help shape Federal policy. Fellows combine their teaching and their fellowship experience for the betterment of students across the country. This year commemorates the 20th anniversary of the Einstein Fellowship Program.

Over the course of the past 20 years, 173 fellows have served in this important program. This year, there are 24 fellows representing math, science, technology, career and technical education, special education, and engineering teachers. They have come from 47 States, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico with a diverse range of experience and background.

The Einstein Distinguished Educator Fellowship provides Congress direct access to teachers who come straight from their classrooms and bring with them a firsthand understanding of how school works. Einstein fellows have also served in most of the Federal agencies, including the Department of Energy, the Department of Education, the National Institutes of Health, National Aeronautics and Space Administration, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, National Science Foundation, National Institute of Standards and Technology, and Office of Science and Technology Policy.

In these agencies, fellows are directly involved with educational outreach activities, curriculum development, teacher training, grant proposal review, program analysis and improvement, and other activities where the experience of a STEM educator provides practical insight and vital input.

These teachers serving in our Nation's Capital lend another important voice for the students who will be tomorrow's leaders. These students are entering a world that requires the concrete skills, creative thinking, and innovation that STEM education provides. Alumni of the program maintain leadership roles in STEM education, which amplifies the value of the fellowship.

Einstein fellows who return to their classrooms and communities bring a wealth of new skills, knowledge, and an enhanced perspective for how their teaching fits into the larger picture of our country's education policy. These teachers renew their efforts to inspire their students and encourage them to pursue STEM pathways. Einstein fellows have also gone on to teach and mentor teachers in university programs, coordinate statewide efforts on STEM curriculum initiatives, and continue serving in the administration and in Congress.

Congressman HONDA, who is not here today, wanted me to express his strong support for the Einstein fellowship program, but he is feeling under the weather and can't be here. So I will submit a statement by Congressman HONDA in support of the resolution into the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, once again I express my support for the 20th anniversary of the Albert Einstein Distinguished Educator Fellowship Program. I want to thank Representative HONDA for bringing this resolution to the floor, and I urge my colleagues to pass the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution, H. Res. 1322, celebrating the 20th anniversary of the Albert Einstein Distinguished Educator Fellowship Program, recognizing the significant contributions made by Albert Einstein fellows.

The Albert Einstein Distinguished Educator Fellowship Program offers current public or private elementary and secondary mathematics, technology and science classroom teachers who have demonstrated excellence in teaching an opportunity to serve in the national public policy arena.

Einstein fellows are selected, through a competitive selection process, to spend a school year in a congressional office or in one of a number of Federal executive branch departments. Einstein fellows provide policymakers and Federal agencies with a real-world perspective. Their invaluable contributions help to provide practical insight and a unique knowledge base in the formulation, application, and implementation of Federal policy. Some of the contributions of Einstein fellows include creating Web-based science education programs and establishing and evaluating national and regional programs on school reform and teacher preparation.

As educators who are working to provide the Nation's students with a high-quality education, Einstein fellows enrich students' educations in a twofold manner: by educating them in the classrooms and by guiding the policy that will direct their educations in the future.

I encourage my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 1322, celebrating the 20th anniversary of the Albert Einstein Distinguished Educator Program and recognizing the significant contributions of Albert Einstein Fellows.

For 20 years, Albert Einstein Distinguished Educator Fellows have worked in the Senate and House, and Federal agencies, drafting legislation and creating innovative educational programs and interventions. Einstein Fellows are selected through a highly competitive process from among the best science, technology, engineering, and mathematics teachers in the field, and represent diverse geographic regions, backgrounds and communities.

Over 190 Einstein Fellows have played a critical role in helping to advance the fields of education, science, technology, engineering, mathematics in the United States by applying their classroom experience to shape public policy. Their deep understanding of both science and pedagogy has provided practical insights and “real world” perspectives to policy makers and program administrators.

Teachers who are chosen to be Albert Einstein Fellows demonstrate exceptional expertise in teaching in elementary or secondary schools and have an interest and willingness to be involved in public policy. Many are recognized for excellence through the Presidential Awards for Excellence in Mathematics or Science Teaching and other prestigious awards. These dedicated teachers interrupt their careers and leave their homes and classrooms behind to spend a school year in a Congressional Office, the Department of Education, the Department of Energy, NASA, NIH, NIST, NOAA, NSF, OSTP, applying their classroom experience to shape public policy while expanding their valuable skills.

The Einstein Fellows, during their service and later upon the continuation of their professional careers, serve as role models and example of dedication and commitment for past, current and future generations of educators and public servants:

I have had the benefit of having Einstein Fellows in my office for the past four years and I can personally attest to the tremendous contributions they have made to science education throughout the nation. For example, Luke Laurie, a middle school science teacher from California, worked on Global Warming Education legislation and an effort to congratulate Vice President Al Gore on his Nobel Prize; Ed Potosnak, a secondary school science teacher from New Jersey, who developed the Enhancing Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics Education Act and the Educational Opportunity and Equity Commission Act; and Eduardo Guevara, a secondary school science teacher from Texas, who is working on the One America, Many Voices Act, which would appropriately compensate Federal workers with multilingual skills, on legislation to establish prizes for educational technology innovation, and on equity in educational opportunities for Bilingual Learners (ELLS).

President Obama himself experienced the benefits of having an Einstein Fellow in his office when he was a freshman Senator.

In conjunction with the 20th Anniversary of the program, on June 28th and 29th the Einstein Fellowship Summit will be held here in Washington, where former and current fellows will address issues related to STEM education. Members have been invited to the Congressional reception to be held at the Rayburn Gold Room, and I encourage my colleagues to attend that event to meet current and former fellows and celebrate the 20th Anniversary of the Albert Einstein Distinguished Educator Fellowship Program.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution and the Einstein Distinguished Educator Fellowship Program.

Mr. PETRI. I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this resolution, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 1322.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from California.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I request 5 legislative days during which Members may revise and extend and insert extraneous material on H.R. 4855, as amended, into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

Ms. WOOLSEY. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support the passage of H.R. 4855, as amended, the Work-Life Balance Award Act, a bill introduced with Chairman MILLER.

I thank Chairman MILLER for his hard work in bringing this legislation forward.

I also want to thank my Republican colleagues—Ranking Member KLINE and Representative CATHY MCMORRIS RODGERS, who is the ranking member of the Workforce Protections Subcommittee—for their support and for their hard work.

H.R. 4855, as amended, establishes an award at the Department of Labor to be presented annually to employers of any size which have exemplary work-life policies. The bill also sets up an independent board, appointed by the Secretary of Labor, based on recommendations from Congress, to develop the application process and to establish criteria for evaluating the work-life balance policies of applicants. The board is also charged with providing awardee recommendations to the Secretary. The board will consist of representatives from children and families' groups, from State and local governments, from business or business organizations, and from labor.

The Workforce Protections Subcommittee held a hearing on the introduced bill in April. Our witnesses testified that the bill could be improved by establishing broad guidelines for the board to consider in establishing its criteria.

As a result, H.R. 4855, as amended, provides, in determining the criteria, that the board may consider those work-life policies which provide access to employees regardless of wage level, job position, or the number of hours worked; two, which ensure that workers can use the policies without risk of penalty; three, which allow workers to exercise the policy with regard to a broad range of family members. In addition, the board may also evaluate other factors affecting the quality of the workplace, including employee benefits and compliance with labor and health and safety laws.

Finally, the bill requires the Secretary to collect data from the application process. This data is important because it will tell us not only what policies are being offered but also what policies are actually being utilized by workers and employers.

Working Mother Magazine and the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation, Mr. Speaker, also give out awards to companies with outstanding work-life balance policies. They are great programs, and this award is not intended to supplant these or other awards but to complement ongoing efforts. Creating an award at the U.S. Department of Labor is important for a number of reasons.

Outside of the Family and Medical Leave Act, which provides unpaid leave for qualifying employees, there is no national policy to support work-life balance. This award will send a strong message that the Federal Government supports and encourages work-life balance.

With that, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

H.R. 4855, the Work-Life Balance Award Act, establishes an annual award within the Department of Labor to recognize employers with exemplary work-life balance policies. This bill represents a bipartisan effort to highlight the positive policies currently being used by employers to help their employees meet the competing demands of family and work. H.R. 4855 would highlight best practices by employers and encourage innovation in the adoption of work-life balance policies, which we hope will encourage other companies to adopt similar programs.

It's important to note that the bill does not create any mandates or new requirements. Many employers accommodate employee requests for greater workplace flexibility without the use of government mandates, which can increase the cost of employment and stifle creative arrangements. If employers want to pursue this award, they will do so voluntarily and with no penalty if they choose not to do so, nor will this award confer any specific government procurement or tax advantage on the recipients. The only advantage will be related to the employer being able to market themselves as winning this award and providing these types of flexibility in their workplaces.

It's appropriate that the bill sets out a process by which the criteria for receiving this award will be determined. For us in Congress to claim that we know best about what constitutes appropriate flexibility in the workplace and to lock that in so that it could not be changed without another act of Congress would be, frankly, presumptuous and ensure that this award would lose its relevancy over time as new concepts of flexibility emerge and employers respond to employee needs in new ways.

This award would complement similar private-sector awards and showcase public and private organizations that maintain and utilize policies to help their employees to find ways to maintain productivity, while providing workplace flexibility. The award program would be housed at the U.S. Department of Labor, and funding for the program would come out of existing funds at the Labor Department.

I'd like to thank the sponsors of the bill, particularly the main sponsor, Congresswoman WOOLSEY, for working to craft this bill in a bipartisan manner and for maintaining an open dialogue with interested parties throughout this process.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield such time as he may consume to the chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER).

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

I would like to commend Congresswoman WOOLSEY for her leadership on the work-life balance issues in her capacity as Chair of the Workforce Protection Subcommittee. Her commitment on these important issues is a great asset to the Education and Labor Committee in this Congress. I am pleased to serve with her and support her legislation before us today to recognize family-friendly workplaces. The Work-Life Balance Act will recognize employers of any size for their exemplary work-life balance policies. Not only will the award set a standard for best practices, it will shine a much-needed light on the concerns of working families.

Over the past 40 years, America's working families have changed dramatically. While once a single breadwinner could support a middle-class family, today that situation appears to be a relic of the past. Women now make up half of the workforce and share a greater responsibility for financially supporting the family. While women now are full partners in providing for families, many remain the primary caregiver for their children and other family members. Balancing the career and family responsibilities can seem impossible at times. But in today's economy, achieving balance is necessary.

Women are not doing this alone. Increasingly, men are becoming more involved with child care and elder care responsibilities. Good employers recognize this and understand the importance of providing flexibility to their employees. They have rightly revamped family leave policies to attract and retain best workers. Employers understand that family-friendly policies not only help workers balance work and family, but also improve employers' bottom line. These policies increase retention rates, decrease absenteeism, improve productivity and morale.

What's good for the modern family is good for business. Businesses that are doing the right things to promote a better work-life balance should be recognized. It goes to the heart of our Nation's competitiveness and how we value our Nation's families.

Parents should never have to choose between their paycheck and taking a day off because their child needs to see a doctor. This is precisely why I am a strong supporter of the bill before us today, the Work-Life Balance Award Act. This award will serve as a benchmark for companies who wish to improve their current policies so that they can be more accommodating to the needs of their workers. It will also give prospective employees a leg up when they're looking for family-friendly workplaces to go to work.

The proof will be in the results. When employers choose to implement pro-family policies, they reap the benefits of a healthier, more productive workforce. I urge my fellow colleagues to vote "yes" with me today on this important and necessary bill. Thank you very much, again, to the author of this legislation, Congresswoman WOOLSEY.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, many years ago, when my children were not parents themselves, I was working full time outside of the home, with four children. It was a struggle to meet both the needs of my family as well as the responsibilities of my job. And as the human resources manager of a startup electronics company about 30 years ago, I was aware that many of my employees were going through the very same struggles that I was. Unfortunately, some 30 years later, nearly every single parent is under these pressures—men as well as women. And they are desperate for work-life balance.

One of the main reasons I ran for Congress over 18 years ago was to fight for working families. I was a new Member when we passed the Family and Medical Leave Act, and I knew what an important step we were taking, particularly for working women, to provide job-protected family and medical leave for certain workers, even though it was unpaid.

But the benefits provided by FMLA are not sufficient. While more than 100 million leaves have been taken under the Family and Medical Leave Act, nearly two in three workers are not covered by the Act. And even if they are, most can't take advantage of its provisions because they simply cannot afford to take unpaid leave.

Sadly, the United States lags far behind the rest of the world in providing work-life benefits to their employees. It is unacceptable that our country, which is the number one economy in the world, can barely compete with developing nations in this arena. Workers should not have to choose between work and family, and ultimately we in Congress need to do much more.

However, the effort for work-life balance must be waged on all fronts, and currently, many in the business world are leading the way. These companies know that providing work-life benefits increases retention, decreases absenteeism, and increases productivity and loyalty.

The award created by H.R. 4855, as amended, will recognize these employers for their efforts and create an incentive for others. It will also set standards for best practices and shine a light on the needs of working families.

Mr. Speaker, I hope we will vote for the second step after the Family and Medical Leave Act that this Congress will take to support working Americans, men and women, and help them balance the challenges they meet in doing a good job for their families and a good job for their employer, because it must be possible. And we can help make that happen.

Ms. JACKSON LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4855, the Work-Life Balance Award Act." Thank you to my colleagues: Congresswoman WOOLSEY and Congressman MILLER for introducing this important legislation that establishes, in the Department of Labor, an annual Work-Life Balance Award for employers that have developed and implemented work-life balance policies.

We are all aware of the benefits of holding a job, but too little attention has been paid to the dangers associated with stressful working conditions. Long hours have a significantly negative impact on life satisfaction and time-related stress, which in turn have a negative effect on wellbeing.

Non-standard work hours, and stressful workplace environments cause health problems, higher levels of stress, psychological distress, greater relationship conflicts for dual-income couples, less time spent with children and lower life satisfaction.

A peer-reviewed study of 10,000 Londoners tracked since 1985, published in the European Heart Journal, found that rates of angina, nonfatal heart attacks and death from heart-related conditions were 60 percent higher in people who worked at least three hours beyond "the normal, seven-hour day" compared with those who didn't work that amount of overtime. The study notes that overtime work "has increased in recent years" and that the U.S. is one of the countries that is well above average in percentage of people working overtime.

A Canadian study found that "people experiencing time pressure have lower levels of satisfaction, higher levels of stress, lower self-reported physical and emotional wellbeing, and greater insomnia. Work-life conflicts can lead to higher levels of anxiety and depression; sleep disturbances and a host of other ailments."

The World Health Organization (WHO) highlights recent research in the domain of occupational health psychology shows that many stressful experiences are linked to being offended—for instance, by being offended or ridiculed, by social exclusion, by social conflict, by illegitimate tasks. According to the WHO, "Such experiences of being treated in an unfair manner constitute an 'Offence to Self,' and this may have quite far reaching consequences in terms of health and wellbeing."

In the United States, the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) is greatly concerned with the health effects of workplace stress. According to the CDC, "evidence is rapidly accumulating to suggest that stress plays an important role in several types of chronic health problems—especially cardiovascular disease, musculoskeletal disorders, and psychological disorders."

Mr. Speaker, although some employers create unhealthy work environments, other employers now recognize that staff who feel able to balance the demands of work and home are more engaged, productive and motivated. These trendsetters deserve to be recognized for their compassion and leadership. This is why I support the Work-Life Balance Award Act.

Research has identified organizational characteristics associated with both healthy, low-stress work and high levels of productivity. According to the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH), examples of these characteristics include: recognition of employees for good work performance, opportunities for career development, an organizational culture that values the individual worker, and management actions that are consistent with organizational values.

Mr. Speaker, widespread workplace stress is costly to our citizens and our nation. Stressful work environments ruin lives and are costly to our healthcare system. It is often said that prevention is the best medicine; establishing a balance between work and life is a vital disease prevention measure.

Once again, I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mrs. McMORRIS RODGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume. I rise in support for H.R. 4855, the Work-Life Balance Award Act, a bill that would establish an annual award in the Department of Labor recognizing the efforts of employers to implement exemplary work-life balance policies in the work place.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Chairwoman for her ongoing efforts in this area.

It's clear that the biggest concern for workers in this struggling economy is job security. And without a doubt, work-life balance issues play into these concerns—particularly as the needs of families are changing.

I know firsthand, being a wife and the mom of a three year old, that one of the biggest struggles working parents face is how to balance work and family responsibilities. Employees need flexibility to get their jobs done while still making the school play, staying home with a sick child, or supporting an aging parent.

At the same time, employers are finding that they have to meet these needs in innovative ways in order to remain productive and profitable.

The good news is that employers are rising to the challenge—recognizing that flexible work policies are effective and necessary. The bill that we are considering today will highlight those employers who are already creatively meeting the needs of their workers.

In addition, it is my hope that this award will continue the national discussion that has been started on the benefits of flexible work arrangements and will encourage more employers to invest in them.

Again, I would like to thank the Chairwoman for her efforts on this important area and urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Ms. WOOLSEY. I yield back the balance of my time.

MOMENT OF SILENCE IN MEMORY OF FORMER REPRESENTATIVE FRANK EVANS OF COLORADO

(Mr. SALAZAR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SALAZAR. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the entire Colorado delegation, I request a moment of silence today to pay tribute to a dedicated public servant from the State of Colorado.

Former Congressman Frank Evans passed away on Tuesday, June 8, 2010. Colorado and the city of the Pueblo have lost a tremendously respected leader.

Congressman Evans led a remarkable life. A Pueblo native, Congressman Evans served in the Navy, flying planes in the Pacific theater of World War II. He returned to Colorado to get his law degree from the University of Denver, before being elected to represent Pueblo in the State Assembly in 1960. Named "Outstanding Freshman of the Year," his colleagues and constituents alike were inspired by his dedication to public service.

The tremendous impact his leadership has had on our district can still be felt to this day. Congressman Evans was responsible for bringing in the Government Printing Office Distribution Center to Pueblo, and he was the mastermind behind the popular Payment in Lieu of Taxes program that has brought Federal dollars for Federal lands to States like ours.

When serving in Congress, Congressman Evans was a fervent advocate for the people and western way of life in the Third District of Colorado. Never losing sight of issues important to Coloradans, he was also a true gentleman.

In the often contentious atmosphere of today's politics, Congressman Evans was an example to those of us who strive to serve the public. His close friend said of him: That was Frank, always a gentleman. He wanted the facts. He wouldn't go after somebody just for partisan reasons.

Congressman Evans never forgot where he came from and he lived to serve others so that they could have a brighter future. I am proud to serve in his former seat, and grateful for his legacy.

Our condolences go out to his family during this difficult time. He will be missed, but his memory will live on through all the lives he touched in western Colorado.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members will rise and observe a moment of silence.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and insert extraneous material in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVIN. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This bill, H.R. 5486, the Small Business Jobs Tax Relief Act of 2010, is, in a few words, a continuation of our work to spur job creation and to really improve the quality of life in all of our communities. Since the beginning of this year, our economy has created 982,000 jobs. That is a reversal of 22 straight months of job losses, a very long stretch indeed. But we all know that far too many people today are out of work and the unemployment rate remains at a very unacceptably high 9.7 percent. So something considerable has been done, but we have to do more.

According to the SBA—and I think we all know this—small firms created 64 percent of the net new jobs between 1993 and the third quarter of 2008. So small businesses help lead job creation in a recovery, but today, small firms are having difficulty accessing capital.

So what does this bill do? It provides a total of $3.588 billion in tax cuts to help American small businesses. It is part of the partnership between the public and the private sector, relying on the private sector to do the job creation. And I want to emphasize, this bill does not add a dime to our deficit. It doesn't even add a penny to our deficit.

So let me explain the provisions in H.R. 5486. First of all, relating to business stock, small business stock, and capital gains, presently there's an exclusion of 75 percent because of the Recovery Act, and I emphasize that. This would increase the exclusion to 100 percent. It provides relief for small businesses from tax penalties when that is indeed appropriate. It also increases the deduction for startup costs for expenses not related to capital or equipment. It increases it from $5,000 to $20,000. So these are important stimuli for small business to help them create more jobs.

As I said earlier, this is offset. It will not add a dime or, indeed, a penny to the Federal deficit. It includes two provisions that have already passed this House. One relates to what is sometimes called a grandchild of black liquor. It relates to essentially a byproduct. What this does, building on the work that we did in earlier bills, is to prevent people from receiving a windfall from unintended application of renewable fuel credits.

The second part relates to what are called grantor retained annuity trusts, and I want to just say a quick word about this. This is clearly a loophole. This is clearly an abuse. Here's what happens, to try to put it in the simplest terms: A short-term trust usually is created by someone for a child. Then the person who created the trust takes back the value, let's say, in a few annual payments. So there's no gift tax for the grantor. The way it works today, all of the increase in the value of the stock is also outside of the gift tax.

So, essentially, what is happening here is a paper transaction that leads to escape of taxation, and this provides in our bill that there has to be a 10-year term for the trust to be sure that the trust has actual substance. This change raises $5.297 billion over 10 years. So what this means, breaking it down in simple terms, is that about $500 million per year from taxpayers is lost today through paper transactions, and we close the loophole. So, again, because of this, there is not any added cost.

We also, if I might say so and will be discussing this I guess tomorrow, it provides money for the small business lending package, H.R. 5297. So that is also budget neutral, and that provides some additional important small business loan help so badly needed. It's hard to understand why people would vote against this. Plus, a provision that is $2 billion worth, and it goes to States and local governments, and they have written us, urging that we provide some assistance so that they can increase the flow of loans to small businesses in their States.

So, in a word, we have a bill that is essentially a two-fer. It provides needed assistance for job creation by small business, and it's paid for. So I urge very much that somehow the other side can cross the bridge and join together instead of creating obstacles and vote for this bill and then its partner bill tomorrow.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this bill contains many positive features but also some negative ones, and thus, I reluctantly plan to oppose it.

Like my friend on the other side of the aisle, I'm pleased to see that it does include some tax relief, albeit limited, for small businesses, including provisions championed by both Republicans and Democrats. I'm also pleased, unlike earlier versions of this legislation, the most objectionable revenue raiser, a provision that could provoke retaliation by other countries and that even the Obama administration officials warned would violate our international treaty obligations, has been dropped from this bill. But despite those positive features, I will be voting against this bill for several important reasons.

First, while the tax relief in here is welcome, it's not enough and won't actually help small businesses create the jobs we need to reduce our stubbornly high unemployment rate. While I would certainly support further lowering taxes on small businesses, the last thing they need is higher taxes, which is exactly what they are facing from this Congress.

Just last month, the majority pushed through an $11.2 billion tax hike on certain small businesses that would subject their profits to employment taxes, and at the end of 2010, all individual income tax rates, as well as taxes on dividends and capital gains, are scheduled to rise dramatically. Because so many small businesses pay taxes at the individual level, the fear of these increases is chilling expansion and hiring and, therefore, job creation. So the majority's record on tax policy affecting small businesses is spotty at best.

Second, this bill, like others before it, provides a stark reminder of the majority's view of the Ways and Means Committee as an ATM machine to fund other spending. Here, the majority is seeking to generate $7.1 billion in additional tax revenue but would only provide $3.6 billion in tax relief over the next decade. The rest of the money raised will be used to offset the cost of another bill, H.R. 4297, which was reported by the Financial Services Committee, that creates another TARP-like program. Some might call it TARP III.

While I'm glad the majority found offsets that are less economically damaging than some that have previously passed the House, the practice of using permanent changes in tax receipts to fund temporary spending is disappointing and portends further and larger tax hikes in the future, perhaps as soon as the end of this month when the majority hopes to complete action on a financial system reform bill.

Mr. Speaker, especially with the unemployment rate continuing to hover near 10 percent, our small businesses, the engine of economic growth and job creation, need help, but this bill isn't enough, and it takes us further down the dangerous road of higher spending our Nation cannot afford.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEVIN. Before I yield, I just want to say to Mr. CAMP, I listened intently, and I can't understand your opposition. You like the provisions. You don't like what we once passed. If you don't like what we passed before—and I disagree with you—it's even more of a reason to vote for this bill.

You complain about permanent changes. We're closing a loophole permanently. You want us to close it temporarily? And we're preventing a provision coming into effect that should never come into effect.

So I just urge people to listen to the quality of this discussion, and I think, so far, it all points to everybody on both sides of the aisle voting for this bill. It helps small business. That's been acknowledged, and you don't challenge the tax cuts in terms of their merits. You talk about another tax cut in another bill you didn't like. I think you find it hard to find anything you like.

I now yield 2 minutes to another member of our committee, our distinguished colleague from Massachusetts (Mr. NEAL).

Mr. NEAL. I thank Mr. LEVIN for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I stand in support of this small business bill before us today. In addition to the several tax breaks that Mr. LEVIN has pointed out, the bill will create a lending fund for our community banks to crop into. That's perhaps the most salient part of this proposal, to get capital flowing, to get capital back into the marketplace so that there's an opportunity for small businesses across the country to take advantage of what heretofore has become a dried up resource, and that is the availability of capital.

□ 1600

While the data tells us the economy is improving, our small businesses back home are still struggling, and much of that is due to the fact that lines of credit have tightened up or in many instances simply gone away. Now, those businesses are doing their best to keep everyone on the payroll even though sales are slow in an attempt to climb back, but the regulators have kept a strong hand and hold on banks that otherwise might be lending.

Now, conceptually, I don't know how you can be opposed to this legislation. Community banks provide more than half of the small business loans in America that are less than $100,000. In Massachusetts alone, commercial bank lending to small businesses through the SBA guarantee program has doubled over the last year. This legislation will help even more.

If you really care about small businesses and entrepreneurship and growing the economy, the essential argument here is how do we get these small business people back on their feet. The proposal here is to provide some tax relief. Greater lending possibilities with the prospect of encouraging small businesses to grow and invest is a very important part of what's incorporated in this very piece of legislation.

Now, always we would find amongst the 435 of us in this institution a different way to do it, but that's not the proposal in front of us.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I just want to respond to my friend from Michigan, the chairman, and say it's really about the reality of this legislation, not just the rhetoric. And while excluding capital gains on the sale of small business stock is a great provision, the problem is this is drafted so narrowly that the small businesses have to be C corporations. And as we know, only a fraction of small businesses will be considered qualified small businesses to take advantage of this provision. This is the largest piece of this so-called "small business relief" bill. And while it's great to talk about, the reality of it is going to be very limited.

As I said in my statement, there are some positive things in this bill. Obviously, closing the Black Liquor 3 loophole is something I support, but on balance, because the bill isn't really going to do anything to create jobs, A, and, B, because there are, again, going to be temporary provisions that are paid for with permanent tax increases, and, third, the revenue raiser on the estate tax area on the Grantor Retained Annuity Trust is really one that ought to be reserved for when we have to deal with estate tax reform. As you know, the law has expired. There are bills moving through the Congress to reinstate the estate tax. This really is appropriate to that area.

I think it is absolutely unconscionable that we've gone all this time with no estate tax, with everyone understanding that the majority is going to create a retroactive death tax bill that's going to try to come back through the beginning of the year. This is where that provision should be.

So, again, I reluctantly oppose this bill. I think there are some good things in it; unfortunately, they don't go far enough.

I now yield 2 minutes to the distinguished member of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ROSKAM).

Mr. ROSKAM. I thank Mr. CAMP for yielding.

Chairman LEVIN said a minute ago that it's hard to find anything that the minority likes. I'll tell you a few things, Mr. Speaker, that we would like. We would have liked a stimulus that worked. We would have liked a stimulus where unemployment actually peaked at 8 percent as long as our children and grandchildren were being foisted with a $1 trillion obligation. We would have liked it if last month's unemployment numbers weren't goosed up by simply census employees joining the ranks. We would have liked it, Mr. Speaker, if during the health care debate a thoughtful approach had been put forward that wasn't going to cost employers like Caterpillar in my home State $100 million in the first year or John Deere $150 million in the first year. We would have like those things, Mr. Speaker.

I think what the majority is laying out is kind of a happy life of low expectations. That's not a bad way to go through life, but I think that we can do so much more than this. And to Mr. CAMP's point, there are some things that are here that are decent and that are marginally okay and slightly better, but is that how dim the lights are in this Chamber that that's our expectation, that something is just sort of okay? I mean, this is an increase in government spending, after all, so I think we can do so much better. Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that we are halfway through the tax year and the research and development tax credit isn't resolved by this majority in this Congress? Why is it that the death tax is a complete ambiguity?

So in answer to the chairman, I have a lot of respect for him and for his work and his sincerity, but I think I want to echo Mr. CAMP's observation, that this is so narrowly crafted and so de minimus and being proclaimed by the same folks that promised us great things in the stimulus that I think we can do better.

Mr. LEVIN. You say do better; you won't vote for anything.

I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) to explain why this is more than de minimus, a bill that needs to be voted on on a bipartisan basis.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, sometimes when life gets rough for me, I try to put myself in the shoes of the other guy. What a rough time to be in the minority. We have so many people whose hopes and dreams have been shattered, they're out of work, they're angry, the economy has been blown wide open, and we find that the order of the day with the opposition is that they just have to say no. It must be awkward to say what I would do if this bill was defeated. It must be terrible to talk about the past things that haven't worked when someone has just lost their home or can't pay their rent or put food on the table or get clothes for their kids.

It's a rough time for all Americans, and anybody who believes that Democrats always get it right, well, it's difficult to do, but for crying out loud, we have to do something. The $787 billion we voted on trying to get us out of this economic mess, and all the money just floated on the top for the big banks. Now we're trying to see what really works. Listening to the calls of small business people, trying to make certain they have capital to get the inventory, to provide the goods and services, to hire people, and as everyone admits, this is where the major jobs come.

For crying out loud, sometimes the late John Kennedy said, The party just asks too much of you. These people are out of work. They're not Democrats and Republicans; they're American people. They work hard for their dignity. They're the ones that supported our country during good times. And now that times are rough, they've got to listen to debates between Republicans and Democrats as to, gee, this is what I would do if I was in charge? I don't think that's fair. And I really believe that the voters are not going to believe that all we can do is come up with ideas, have them ridiculed, and then just say no.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVIN. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. RANGEL. Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman.

I know from time to time when my party asked me to carry too much weight that morally I don't believe I can do it, that somehow there are people on our side of the aisle that take the risk and being able to say I did it not because my party asked me to do it, I did it not to be opposed, I did it because it's the right thing to do.

Now you have to find the issue; if it's not health care, if it's not education, if it's not national security, how about the opportunity to work, to make a living, to have the dignity, to have the pride, to raise your family, and indeed to pay taxes?

This is going to be our last opportunity for this year. Maybe next year there will be a change in the philosophy—if you want to call it that—of the minority and they will work together; but I do hope this idea that on everything we come up with to improve the quality of life for the people of this great Nation, that the opposition can come up with something except “just say no.”

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This bill is going to spend taxpayers' money. I believe we have an obligation, if we're going to spend taxpayers' money, that we do it effectively. On Friday night, the Treasury released a report that in 2015 our debt will exceed the gross domestic product of this country. We've had expert testimony before the Debt Commission that said when your debt gets to 90 percent of GDP, you lose 1 percent off economic growth, which translates into 1 million jobs.

This bill, because of how narrowly focused it is, how narrowly drafted it is, virtually no small businesses will take advantage of the exclusion of capital gains because they have to be C corporations. And if there is one trend we've seen, it's that businesses are being organized as passed-through entities now. That's how America, particularly small business America, is being organized. So while this is great rhetoric, this bill isn't going to be effective in doing anything.

And let me just say, I heard the former chairman say that Republicans just say no. On the health care bill, we had a viable alternative. In fact, I will say the vote on the health care bill was bipartisan opposition, only majority partisanship support for that legislation. Whether it's been stimulus or health care or energy, we have had viable alternatives on the floor that we have brought forward. On this particular bill, I think that better work could have been done, more effective work could have been done. And, frankly, in this era of the highest debt ever this country has seen, I think we have an obligation that if we're going to spend taxpayers' dollars, it's done in an effective way and a way that gets results, and this bill falls short.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEVIN. I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER), member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, this legislation is personal for me. We've watched our country come back from the brink in the fall of 2008. In my State of Oregon, helped by Recovery Act funds of about $6 billion, we've been able to stabilize and make some progress. Is it enough? Absolutely not. But I've had a steady parade of people coming to my office thanking me for the investment that was made in terms of infrastructure, in terms of health care, in terms of making sure that we didn't have layoffs of public employees.

Now we have a provision here that is an opportunity to focus on small business. It is a package, as the chairman mentioned, with two pieces. It's ironic that our friends are telling us that it's just not enough. These are small pieces, yet they were saying, on the other hand, the legislation we had that CBO has scored over 1.2 million jobs to as much as 2.8 million saved or created was too big. Well, we ought to be chipping away as we can on this. Having $30 billion for a small business lending fund, being able to provide a couple billion dollars of tax exclusion for small business capital formation are positive items.

You know, one of the things that strikes me as ironic is that our friends on the other side of the aisle ignore the fact that the Recovery Act legislation that we had previously, 42 percent of it, was for tax cuts and for preventing the impact of the alternative minimum tax from hitting middle and upper middle-income families. Every family in America which made under $250,000 a year got tax cuts last year, and they are getting tax cuts this year. We have tried tax cuts to help move things forward. Now, this is small business lending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SERRANO). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVIN. I yield the gentleman an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. This is part of an ongoing effort which is making a difference. The job losses peaked the month that President Obama took office—not his fault. They had been building for 22 months. Now we are making some progress. Is it enough? All of us agree that it is not, but I would suggest that dismissing this because they think it doesn't solve everything would be, I'm afraid, disingenuous. I don't think it's helpful.

I strongly urge the support of this legislation and then for us to continue with the task of rebuilding and renewing America, of reforming the Tax Code, and of coaxing the most out of these investments.

Mr. CAMP. At this time, I yield the customary 1 minute to the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER).

Mr. BOEHNER. I want to thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the bill before us today is supposed to be about helping small businesses. We do need to help small businesses as they are the engines of economic growth in our country. When you look at the jobs report that came out last month, there were only 41,000 private-sector jobs created.

Yet, if we really want this bill to work and if we really want small businesses to be able to begin hiring once again, what we really need to do is to repeal the job-killing health care law that was passed in this Chamber on March 21. The heart of that law is something that is called the "individual mandate." The individual mandate forces Americans to buy health insurance whether they want to or not, whether they can afford it or not. For small businesses, if they don't provide health insurance, guess what? The government is going to tax you. This is preventing small businesses from hiring additional people.

Twenty States and the Nation's leading small business organization agree that this law is unconstitutional, and they are fighting to overturn it. The Federal Government shouldn't be in the business of forcing you to buy health insurance and of taxing you if you don't.

If we really want to help small businesses get back to creating jobs, we should repeal the job-killing health care law, and we should replace it with reforms that will lower the cost of health insurance and that will help protect American jobs.

My colleague from Michigan will be offering a proposal tonight to repeal the unconstitutional individual mandate, which is at the heart of this new law. His idea is posted right now on AmericaSpeakingOut.com. Americans are speaking out on it, and I hope my colleagues will get engaged and will see what the American people have to say about this individual mandate and about the taxes associated with it, but it is pretty clear.

When we get to the motion to recommend, we will offer a motion that will eliminate the individual mandate, and every Member of this House will have an opportunity to stand up for their constituents or to look the other way.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to a member of our committee, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PASCRELL).

Mr. PASCRELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5486.

That is exactly correct. We should stop looking away. Let's focus on what the subject really is.

The gentleman just left the floor, but in the final months of the last administration, on average, we had a loss of 725,000 jobs. This is the first increase that we have had in the private sector in over 2 years. So you are the party of "no." There are no two ways about it. Ever since we hit 750,000 in January of 2009, we have had an improvement every month, and now we are finally in the plus area. It took us 8 years to get into the mess. It is going to take us more than a year and a half to get out of it.

This legislation is incredibly important because it will help this country's small businesses, both new and already existing, by making the Tax Code work for them. After years of misguided tax policies from the previous administration, which only helped extraordinarily wealthy individuals, the Ways and Means Committee is focusing its efforts on the real engine of the American economy: one-third tax cuts in the stimulus, one-third investment in the infrastructure, one-third investment in informational technology, energy jobs, and tax credits. That record is unparalleled. The tax cuts of this year and last year are the largest in the history of this country for any 2-year period because we help the middle class. That is what our party is all about.

According to the Small Business Administration, small businesses have generated 64 percent of the new jobs over the past 15 years, and they must be at the forefront of the economic recovery today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVIN. I yield an additional 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. PASCRELL. How dare someone come before this body and talk about their alternative to the health bill. Their alternative to our health bill would have started the dismantling of Medicare. Read the language of their alternative.

While our economy is growing stronger, unemployment is still too high, which is why we are directing aid to our small businesses. The bill assists already established small businesses by building on the Recovery Act's exclusion of 75 percent of business capital gains to now temporarily exclude 100 percent of capital gains from qualifying stocks, thereby encouraging investment in small businesses, which create jobs but which are encountering problems with restricted access to credit. The bill also helps people who want to start new businesses by quadrupling deductions and by increasing the cap for start-up expenses.

This legislation is imperative in recovery. I ask that we all vote for it.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEVIN. I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Pennsylvania, ALLYSON SCHWARTZ.

Ms. SCHWARTZ. I thank the chairman for his good work on small business and on the economic recovery.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Small Business Jobs Tax Relief Act, which, when merged with the Small Business Jobs Credit Act, will increase lending to small businesses, will expand entrepreneurship, and will put Americans to work.

The bill offers small businesses additional capital through capital gains tax cuts, relief from onerous tax penalties, and expanded deductions for start-up costs. It provides funding to create a small business lending pool which will make loans available to small businesses through our smaller community banks. This pool will provide small business access to much needed capital to acquire new equipment, to renovate, to make energy-efficiency improvements or for other business growth opportunities. It is hard to overstate how important access to capital is for small business, so this action is critically important.

Last week, during a Budget Committee hearing, Ben Bernanke responded to me when I outlined our actions to help our small businesses. He said he was "glad the Congress is exploring these different programs for making credit available to small businesses." He talked additionally about the need to be particularly attentive to new and start-up companies, all critical to our economic recovery and job growth.

All of these comments demonstrate the wisdom of the action that we are taking today to support small business growth. I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on this latest initiative to work with business owners in the private sector to strengthen our economy, to spur innovation, and to create jobs.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the very distinguished Member from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, it is axiomatic in American politics and on this floor that Members come to the floor and praise small business to the heights. People frequently cite statistics which state that small businesses create most of the new private-sector jobs. They're right. They praise small business men and business women, and they are right to praise them. Though, I think, after all the words, it is time that we took some action that actually benefits small business people in the country. This bill provides such action.

It provides access to credit for small businesses which desperately need it. I think Americans are frustrated—and small business people share in the frustration—that, after advancing hundreds of billions of dollars to banks, many of those dollars haven't seemed to find their way into loans to small businesses. The underlying bill begins to address that problem in a very significant way. It extends a practice that this chairman and his predecessor began of extending tax cuts to small businesses. A small business that buys a laptop or a truck or some other piece of equipment can expense that. Businesses can, in effect, cut their taxes by investing their businesses in the economy.

Then we have the ironic statement by the minority leader that, in order to help small businesses, he wants to repeal a law that helps small businesses, for the first time, buy health care. What the new health care law says is that a person running a small software company or a restaurant or a delicatessen should be able to buy health insurance with the same volume discount that Lockheed Martin or General Electric gets. Small business people have been asking for that opportunity for a very long time. The law the President signed provides that.

It is very important to understand that, with all due respect, the minority leader did not correctly state the impact of the bill on small business, so let the record correctly reflect the state of the new law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVIN. I yield the gentleman an additional minute.

Mr. ANDREWS. If a small business person has 50 or fewer full-time employees, there is no mandate on that business to do anything. Businesses which choose to provide health insurance to their employees will have the same abilities that huge companies have to buy health insurance at a discount if they choose. Companies with fewer than 50 full-time employees don't have to do anything. Many of the small businesses which do choose to insure their employees will get significant tax cuts to help them do that.

After all of these words, isn't it time we had some loans for small business? Isn't it time we had some tax cuts for small business and some affordable health care for small business? If you want words, take the minority's approach. If you want action, support this bill.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will note the gentleman from Michigan has 10 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Michigan has 6 minutes remaining.

Mr. LEVIN. I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON LEE).

□ 1630

Ms. JACKSON LEE of Texas. I thank the gentleman for his leadership, and I thank the full Committee on Ways and Means for being a lifeline for small businesses. And I ask my colleagues on the floor of the House to join them.

Without this effort, small business doors across America will close. And, frankly, I believe it is important. As my colleague just said, let us walk the walk and talk the talk. For it is now time to invest in small businesses, which, in actuality, create the backbone of the economy of America and provide for employment in our rural and urban areas across this Nation. In fact, I think it is important to note this bill is paid for. By closing the black liquor loophole and the gift loophole, it will create $8 billion to ensure that we can do the right thing for our small businesses.

I come from an area that is now being impacted by a major oil spill. I visit businesses whose doors are closing for lack of assistance. And I'm glad that we have a President who realizes who is important and is ready to sign this bill.

Small businesses are in need. And so what we have here is an opportunity for banks to refocus their lending policies and give startup credit and access to dollars to help build these small businesses.

Many of us heard of the redirection of the moneys that we lent to big banks in order to help them help America. Well, unfortunately, they couldn't find the doors of small businesses, many of my constituents. And so I am eager to have this legislation passed that's paid for to provide startup costs for small businesses that always have had a major impediment in getting in the door of these banks. Therefore, any relief for small startups is a plus by increasing the amount allowed to be deducted from the bottom line. And the capital gains issues as well that will be very important.

I believe, finally, we need to hold these banks accountable by asking them to provide a plan to ensure that they are providing lending to these businesses. I ask for support of this legislation.

I rise in support of the Small Business Jobs Tax Relief Act of 2010, H.R. 5486. I also want to thank Chairman SANDY LEVIN and the members of the Committee on Ways and Means for their hard work on this legislation. The bill amends the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide tax incentives for small business job creation, and for other purposes.

This bill provides targeted relief for the Nation's small businesses. Without this relief, many small businesses will close, adding to the U.S. unemployment rate, still historically high at 9.7 percent. The tax relief in this bill will begin to address a number of issues confronting the owners of small businesses:

(1) Start-up costs for small businesses have always been a major impediment to their success. Therefore, any relief for small businesses start-ups is a plus. By increasing the amount allowed to be deducted from the bottom line, a small business can then use the additional resources to grow and to expand his or her business. The bill would increase the deductible amount for start-up costs from the current $5000.00 to $20,000.00 for 2010 and 2011.

(2) The bill also eases restrictions on real estate holdings where qualified Small Business Investment Company (SBIC) loans are involved.

(3) This bill will increase, from 50 percent to 100 percent, the exclusion from gross income of the gain from the sale or exchange of qualified small business stock acquired after March 15, 2010, and before January 1, 2012. By reducing the tax liability related to gains on the sale of small business stock, this will free resources to be used for other business purposes in this tight economy.

(4) Another important provision in the bill will exclude from gross income any amount paid under the small business borrower assistance program. Again, tax relief in any shape or form for small businesses is critical to sustained economic growth and economic recovery.

In addition to these tax reliefs, the bill also requires the Commissioner of the Internal Revenue to provide annual reports to Congress on penalties relating to tax shelters and other transactions. Any additional measure designed to promote transparency and accountability must be supported. Again, this bill is a timely measure that will grant relief to a major segment of the Nation's business sector, suffering from the lasting effects of the worst recession in our history. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 5486.

Mr. CAMP. I yield myself such time as I may consume, Mr. Speaker.

I agree with much of what some of the speakers have said today about the importance of small business and the job creation that small business has been responsible for. You can see statistics where 80 percent of the job creation in recent years has been because of small business. Certainly, if we're going to recover as an economy, small business will lead the way, and needs to recover. And we've seen over the past few years the way small business has been organized. Increasingly, they're pass-through entities. The vast majority of small businesses are pass-through entities.

So what does the majority do? They pass a small business bill that doesn't apply to the majority of small businesses. This provision here, which is the bulk of the bill that excludes capital gains on the sale of certain small business stocks, only applies to qualified small businesses. Well, what is a qualified small business? A C corporation. That's how most large businesses are organized. So this bill won't do anything.

Again, while we have record debt, the largest in the history of this country, well over $13 trillion and an estimate from the Treasury Department that, in 2015, the debt will exceed the size of the entire economy of the United States for the first time in history—before we spend taxpayer dollars, we ought to do it in a way that's effective.

There are things that we could do for small business. I will say the majority has made this bill better than it was the first time by dropping some of the controversial provisions that would have potentially caused our trading partners to retaliate against us. Obviously, closing the black liquor provision is something that I think every Republican supports as well. That's a good thing. But the fact that this legislation is not where it should be doesn't mean that we should just look the other way and pass it, because it doesn't meet the standard that this Congress should be meeting in this difficult economic time.

I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. GARRETT).

Mr. GARRETT of New Jersey. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I know that our leader was just down here speaking a moment ago with regard to what is going to be coming shortly, which is the MTR, and I just want to take a moment in regard to that as well, a motion to recommit that will reduce the uncertainty and reduce the regulatory burdens facing who? The small businesses, by repealing the so-called individual mandate from the recently passed health care bill.

Why do we talk about that now? Well, I have a bill that basically does the exact same thing. I introduced H.R. 4999, the Reclaiming Individual Liberty Act, which would also repeal that mandate. Because as we come to the floor right now, it's granted the authority to regulate various aspects of our economy is broad but is not that broad to be able to impose an individual mandate on what we know is, by doing so, we will hurt not only the individual and the family but also the economy of this country as well.

So I commend the gentleman for his work in this regard. I commend the gentleman for the MTR that we're about to see in a few moments. Because in that MTR, just as in the Reclaiming Individual Liberty Act, we recognize that the Constitution prohibits the expansion of government authority in those areas. If we had that ability to do that here, wouldn't we have already done that last year with regard to the auto industry and said, we can mandate people to buy automobiles in that area? We can't do it in that area. We can't do it in this area. And I commend the gentleman for it.

Mr. CAMP. I thank the gentleman for those comments. He makes a very important point.

In closing, I just want to say that we look at the costs that the individual mandate particularly is going to hit hard on small businesses and how difficult that's going to make it for them to continue to be able to expand and hire workers. And we know that the small business health care tax credit is virtually a fraud; that 90 percent of small businesses won't be able to qualify for that because, again, that's so narrowly drafted that there's the rhetoric of being able to say, Aren't we doing all these great things? But the reality is there's nothing there.

Let me just say that at the end of 2010, when all the individual income tax rates increase, as well as on dividends and capital gains, that's going to hit small business particularly hard because most small businesses file as individuals. And that's going to make it much more difficult for them to expand. It's going to make it much more difficult for them to hire and much more difficult for job creation to occur.

Also, I would say that another difficult problem is that this bill, while it generates $7 billion in tax revenue, it only provides about $3.5 billion in tax relief. So, again, taxes are being raised permanently for temporary spending in other parts of our economy, and it's my understanding that most of that extra revenue will be used to help pay for another TARP-like program—TARP III as some call it—that's going to be coming our way.

So, again, with our unemployment rate continuing to be at a lingering 10 percent, the difficulty our small business, the engines of economic growth and job creation are facing, the help they need, this bill is not enough. Again, it takes us down a road of higher spending that our Nation cannot afford at this time.

With that, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LEVIN. I think anybody who has listened to this debate, if they're at all objective, will be completely puzzled by the arguments of the minority. They say this bill won't do anything. But then they say there are tax increases to pay for it that are permanent. That's worse than a lame argument. It's completely without merit and is vacuous. The bill is scored for small business in terms of the exclusion from capital gains tax over 10 years at almost $2 billion. That's nothing. It provides relief from penalties. Over $175 million to small business. That's nothing. It provides an increased deduction for startup expenditures that provides over half a billion dollars, as scored. That's nothing.

Now what's nothing are your arguments. And so you come here, I think, afraid to vote "yes" because it will blur your political message. You say you agree with these provisions, but then you're going to vote "no." You just don't apparently want to be caught being bipartisan. It's going to blur a political message.

I don't understand your argument that the tax provisions are permanent. You don't argue these aren't loopholes. They're loopholes. And you criticize us for closing a loophole permanently, and then you say it's for spending, but you don't really challenge the validity of the spending. We do pay for some monies for the second bill that's coming up because it provides loans to small businesses, and it also provides States that have written us supporting this bill, including your State, Mr. CAMP, saying that they will use this money well to help collateral support for small businesses.

So it's worse than puzzling. I think it's a pathetic effort to find an excuse to vote "no." So then you come up with the argument you have a motion to recommit.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members are reminded to direct their comments to the Chair and not to other Members.

Mr. LEVIN. I'll be glad to do that, Mr. Speaker.

So then there's a motion to recommit to repeal an individual mandate. All I can say is that the individual mandate was the basis of the Republican health care proposal in 1993 and 1994. And now you come up and say you want to eliminate it. This is another entangled position of yours. You're tying yourselves into knots trying to oppose a bill that will provide help for small business. Maybe it's useless to appeal for bipartisanship to the other side.

I close asking for support.

Mr. Speaker, in conjunction with today's consideration in the U.S. House of Representatives of H.R. 5486, the "Small Business Jobs Tax Relief Act of 2010," I have asked the non-partisan Joint Committee on Taxation to make available to the public a technical explanation of the provisions included H.R. 5486. This technical explanation reflects the Ways and Means Committee's understanding and legislative intent behind those provisions. It is available on the Joint Committee on Taxation website at www.jct.gov and is listed under document number JCX-31-10.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, as we rebound from the greatest recession that has ever plagued this nation, it is important that we continue to support legislation that creates jobs and refurbishes the economic stability of American families—supporting small businesses, taxpayers and building a solid foundation for economic recovery.

Small businesses are the life blood of American communities, creating two-thirds of the new jobs over the last 15 years. However, these entrepreneurs are stifled in their efforts to boost the American economy in that they are frequently denied loans and face tight lending standards. Some of the most impoverished citizens in this nation live in the 7th Congressional District of IL. While the national unemployment rate in October 2009 rose to 9.8 percent, these communities experienced unemployment rates of up to 40 percent. We must do all that we can to provide jobs for American citizens and boost the economic stability of this nation. For this reason, I strongly support H.R. 5486—spurring investment in small business, providing for small business penalty relief, and increasing the deduction for business start-up expenses.

These provisions are critical. They provide performance-based incentives to make sure that banks lend to small businesses and avoid what happened in 2009 when 45 percent of small businesses seeking loans were denied credit. Most importantly, as the nation continues its effort to create jobs and overcome high rates of unemployment, these provisions increase the deduction for start-up expenditures and allow entrepreneurs to focus on hiring workers and strengthening the economic stability of their businesses.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5486, Small Business Jobs Tax Relief Act. Small businesses form the backbone of our economy, and this bill helps them grow and create jobs.

H.R. 5486 incentivizes people to invest in small business by increasing the capital gains tax cut. In addition, this bill would make it easier for entrepreneurs looking to start their own small business. H.R. 5486 would quadruple the tax deduction for your start-up and allow more businesses to qualify for the maximum deduction. These entrepreneurs can recover more startup expenses, and then work towards growing, expanding, and hiring new workers.

I have always been a supporter of budget discipline, and the investments we make in this bill are fully paid for. These small business tax measures are paid for by tightening rules for claiming the biofuels tax credit and the estate and gift tax rules. I am pleased that we are able to help grow our economy and reduce the national budget deficit.

While there is solid evidence that the economy is beginning to rebound, the recovery is on shaky footing. Across North Carolina, unemployment is still in the double digits and some counties in the Second District still have unemployment rates of up to 13 percent. Helping private industry create jobs needs to be our top priority, and small businesses are responsible for as many as two out of every three jobs created in our country. This bill provides tax relief to help small businesses create the jobs that we desperately need, and helps them help Main Street America.

As a Member of the House Committee on Ways and Means, I support tax cuts that help small businesses contribute to our economic recovery. This should be a bipartisan effort, and I urge my colleagues to join me in voting for its passage.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Mr. Speaker, for every American seeking a job, and every small business trying to expand so they can hire them, I rise in strong support of the Small Business Jobs and Credit Act of 2010 and the Small Business Jobs Tax Relief Act of 2010. These two pro-growth initiatives illustrate very clearly that jobs continue to be job one in the 111th Congress.

Small businesses are the engines of our economy, and timely, affordable credit is very often the fuel that helps them grow. Since 45 percent of small businesses currently report inadequate credit to support their needs, the Small Business Jobs and Credit Act establishes a new $30 billion fund for community banks, which will leverage up to $300 billion in new private sector lending to small businesses. Importantly, this new lending facility includes performance-based incentives to encourage near term lending by reducing borrowing costs to participating banks that increase their lending over 2009 levels and increasing borrowing costs when lending activity is reduced. The result will be a timely infusion of fresh credit to cash-strapped small businesses looking to create jobs in our growing economy.

To make it easier for entrepreneurs to attract capital and launch new companies, today's legislation also provides a zero capital gains rate on equity investments in qualifying small businesses made between March 15, 2010 and the end of the year—and it quadruples from $5,000 to $20,000 the deduction small businesses can take for start-up expenditures in their first year of operation.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is broadly supported by the National Small Business Association, the Small Business Majority, the Conference of State Bank Supervisors, the Independent Community Bankers of America, the American Bankers Association and the National Bankers Association. It is fully paid for and deserves my colleagues' support.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 5486, the Small Business Jobs Tax Relief Act and H.R. 5297, the Small Business Lending Fund Act of 2010. These bills will help small businesses grow, create wealth in our communities, and create new jobs. As we often hear, small businesses drive our economy and create the most jobs.

I have heard from businesses across my district that have had trouble accessing capital to expand their businesses, to weather this economic storm that Oregon faces, and to add to their workforces. Thousands of jobs have been lost, millions of dollars of savings have evaporated, and dreams have been cast aside or deferred for far too many Oregon families.

The legislation that we will pass today will ease these challenges. The legislation establishes a $30 billion fund to boost lending to small businesses by community banks. To ensure that the additional funding is deployed, the recipient community banks will owe the US Treasury a variable dividend. The more they lend to small businesses, the less they will owe to the Treasury. If they fail to lend, then the dividend obligation increases.

The legislation also makes important tax changes that will benefit the small business community.

The legislation reduces capital gains taxes on the small business community. Under the Recovery Act, Congress excluded seventy-five percent of capital gains tax on the sale of small business stock during 2009 and 2010. This legislation continues and expands that policy by increasing the exclusion to one hundred percent for 2010 to 2012.

The legislation also improves the ability of small businesses to deduct start up costs. Under current law, a start up may deduct $5,000 of start up costs; this legislation will expand that deduction to $20,000. These costs include market surveys, initial advertisements, training costs and other costs associated with starting up a business.

Oregon is still struggling with a near record unemployment rate of 10.6 percent, a percentage point above the national average. In April 2010, over two hundred thousand Oregonians remained unemployed. It is imperative that we do all that we can to improve the economy and to put Oregonians back to work.

Mr. LEVIN. I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 1436, the previous question is ordered on the bill.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 1(c) of rule XIX, further consideration of H.R. 5486 is postponed.

RECOGNIZING CONTRIBUTIONS OF FATHERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, proceedings will resume on a motion to suspend the rules previously postponed.

The unfinished business is the vote on the motion to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 1389) recognizing the immeasurable contributions of fathers in the healthy development of children, supporting responsible fatherhood, and encouraging greater involvement of fathers in the lives of their children, especially on Father's Day, on which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 416, nays 0, not voting 16, as follows:

SMALL BUSINESS JOBS TAX RELIEF ACT OF 2010

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 1(c) of rule XIX, proceedings will now resume on the bill (H.R. 5486) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide tax incentives for small business job creation, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit at the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. CAMP. I am, in its present form.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Camp moves to recommit the bill H.R. 5486 to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment:

At the end, add the following:

Subtitle C—Health Provisions

SEC. 541. REPEAL OF INDIVIDUAL HEALTH INSURANCE MANDATE.

Section 5000A is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(h) TERMINATION.—Subsections (a) and (b) shall not apply with respect to any month beginning after the date of the enactment of this subsection.”.

Mr. CAMP (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading.

Mr. LEVIN. I reserve a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A point of order is reserved.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his motion.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, with the unemployment rate stuck at nearly 10 percent, far too many Americans and small businesses are struggling to get by. While the bill before us contains some very limited benefits, it does little to help small businesses create the jobs so many Americans desperately need.

The motion to recommit the underlying bill keeps the underlying bill intact and provides real help to Americans by repealing one of the most onerous provisions of the new health care law, the individual mandate that, while exempting illegal immigrants, forces Americans to buy government-approved health insurance or pay a tax if they don't.

The Federal Government has never required its citizens to purchase a particular product before, and doing so with health insurance violates the basic principles of freedom and individual choice. No American should be forced to buy or purchase health insurance they don't want or can't afford.

This provision is so controversial that 20 States and the Nation's leading small business organization, the National Federation of Independent Business, have filed a lawsuit questioning its constitutionality. While legal experts will soon start arguing that case, we already know that the individual mandate tax penalty will fall hardest on middle- and low-income Americans.

According to the Congressional Budget Office, in 2016, nearly 75 percent of the Americans who pay this tax will have household incomes below 500 percent of the Federal poverty level. That's roughly $73,000 for a married couple with no children. CBO also tells us that the Democrats' health care law will increase premiums for millions of Americans by up to 13 percent. That's a premium increase of about $2,100.

As the Democrats' health care bill drives up the costs of health care premiums even higher, it will become more and more unaffordable for American families to comply with the mandate. Repealing this mandate will directly benefit millions of Americans and uphold the freedoms upon which this Nation was founded. It has the added benefit of eliminating the need for the IRS to hire thousands of additional employees, possibly as many as 16,000, just to enforce the new health care law.

The recently enacted health care law is bad for workers, bad for employers, and bad for America. Clearly, we need to repeal and replace this law with commonsense reforms that will actually lower health care costs and let Americans keep the plan they have and like.

And let me remind my colleagues of a quote from then-Presidential candidate Barack Obama. And I quote, "A mandate means that in some fashion everybody will be forced to buy health insurance. . . . But I believe the problem is not that folks are trying to avoid getting health care. The problem is they can't afford it."

This health care law increases premiums by $2,100 for millions of American families and requires them to buy this government-approved insurance that they cannot afford.

I urge my colleagues to stand with the American people and vote for the motion to recommit.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of the point of order, and I rise in opposition to the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan withdraws his reservation.

The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LEVIN. Colleagues, individual responsibility is a cornerstone of health reform to ensure that every American has affordable health insurance coverage, and that's why it was included in the GOP 1994 reform. So this is nothing more, nothing more than a disingenuous political stunt to undermine health reform.

Without individual responsibility, it would mean that we could not eliminate exclusions for preexisting conditions. We could not prohibit insurers from refusing to cover someone when they apply. We could not prohibit insurance companies from charging more when you get sick. And according to the CBO, if this were to pass, it would result in the loss of coverage for more than 16 million Americans: 6 million of the most needy among us, 5 million who would lose their insurance from their employers, 5 million who would lose individual insurance. It would raise health insurance premiums for every American buying coverage through the exchange by nearly 20 percent.

This is a small business bill, and it would hurt small business. It would reduce assistance to them to provide health care to their workers, and it would increase taxes on individuals and employers who failed to cover their workers. This is misguided, period. We should defeat this in a round fashion.

Now I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, this amendment, this motion is a guaranteed increase in middle class health insurance premiums for all Americans. If that's what you want, you should vote for it. But you know, when a person goes to the emergency room and is uninsured, doesn't have health insurance, they get health care. The question is who pays the bill.

The provision that is before us from the minority party says that insured middle class Americans should pay the bill. The law the President signed in March says something very different. It says that everyone has the responsibility to earn and pay for, at a reasonable price, their own health insurance.

The question is not whether uninsured people get care; the question is whether insured middle class people pay for it or not. The question is whether when someone has breast cancer or asthma and is turned away because of a preexisting condition that we will be able to insure that person at regular premiums. If you don't have nearly everyone insured, you can't do that.

So if you think that middle class people paying other people's bills is the right way to go, this is your motion. If you think that we should no longer provide health insurance coverage for those with a preexisting condition, then "yes" is your vote.

Our opponents talk of freedom. I think it's time that middle class Americans were free from paying other people's bills and paying for the insurance company mandates. So if that's your version of health care reform, and I believe that's the majority of Americans, then your vote is "no."

Mr. LEVIN. I urge a resounding "no" vote, and therefore I happily yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

Pursuant to clause 8 and clause 9 of rule XX, this 15-minute vote on the motion to recommit will be followed by 5-minute votes on passage of H.R. 5486, if ordered, and suspension of the rules with regard to House Resolution 1322.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 187, noes 230, not voting 15, as follows:

HARRISON HIGH SCHOOL

(Mr. GINGREY of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer my congratulations to Cobb County, Georgia's Harrison High School baseball team, managed by Mark Elkins, who defeated Lassiter in the Class AAAAA State championship series. Harrison triumphed over Lassiter with a 3-1 victory in the title-clinching game of a very exciting and well-played series. Harrison's remarkable defense was on display throughout the entire series, with their fielding skills pacing them to the title.

A few highlights included a diving catch by outfielder Michael Hodorowski to save a run in the opening game. In game two, outfielders Preston Neely and Matthew Allen gunned down runners at home, preventing Lassiter from scoring go-ahead runs. Harrison also pulled off three double plays in the last game, ensuring their pivotal victory.

This is Harrison's first State title since 1998, making this a very special achievement. They are one of two schools from Georgia's 11th Congressional District to win State baseball championships this year, and I am very proud of their accomplishments.

Congratulations, Harrison.

ROLL BACK THE SIZE OF GOVERNMENT NOW

(Mr. GRAVES of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GRAVES of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this administration has borrowed more money than all other administrations in the Nation's history combined, and they've only been at this for just over a year. The change we were promised has not turned out to be what all had hoped for.

The unemployment rate is nearly 2 percent higher than what the Democrats promised with their first stimulus package. America's debt is at $13 trillion now. Now we learn that the administration wants another $50 billion bailout. When will it end? Washington cannot create jobs no matter how much money is thrown out there. We know that jobs can only be created when you expand the private sector and not expand the government.

So, as we look forward to getting Americans back to work, I stand here today to say it is time for Washington to get about the business of expanding the private sector and of promoting sustainable job creation, which will come from that, and not of expanding government.

I know Georgians are tired of what is going on here in Washington, and I know most Americans are, too. Let's end the bailouts, the buyouts, and the stimulus bills.

COMMEMORATING TROOPER FIRST CLASS WESLEY BROWN

(Ms. EDWARDS of Maryland asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. EDWARDS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with a heavy heart to commemorate the life of Maryland State Trooper First Class Wesley Brown. Just 24 years old, Trooper Brown of Seat Pleasant, Maryland, was fatally shot last Friday. Trooper Brown was a brave Maryland State police officer, and a rising leader in our community.

The youngest of nine children, Trooper Brown overcame a challenging childhood to serve Maryland and better the lives of the youth in Prince George's County through a mentoring program he founded, Young Men Enlightening Younger Men. In his own words, Trooper Brown wrote that he founded the program to "show the young men in the community that there is a bigger and brighter future ahead of them with unlimited potential."

Indeed, he had unlimited potential. A son of Prince George's County, a graduate of Crossland High School and an accomplished student of criminal justice, he was a testament to his own words, and a shining light to all whom he encountered.

I join the Maryland State Police family and all those with whom he served in grieving the loss of Trooper Brown. He exemplified the best in our communities and, having spoken with his family, I know he was a wonderful son, brother and soon-to-be husband. His death is a tragic reminder of the perils our law enforcement officers face every day, and the bravery they show to ensure our safety.

I honor the life and memory of Trooper First Class Brown, and our thought and prayers are with his family and friends.

YOUNG MEN ENLIGHTENING YOUNGER MEN ABOUT OUR ORGANIZATION

Welcome,

My name is Wesley Brown and I am the founder of Young Men Enlightening Younger Men (YMEYM). In September, 2007, my friends and family and I came together to show the young men in the community that there is a bigger and brighter future ahead of them with unlimited possibilities. YMEYM meets together as a group at least once a month to take a field trip somewhere outside of our community and spend time bonding and mentoring. Between field trips, the mentors stay in touch with the young men and encourage them to stay in school, do the best they can in school and in extracurricular activities, respect themselves and each other, and to talk out any conflicts instead of resorting to violence.

All of the mentors have committed much of their personal time and finances during this formation period. YMEYM's meeting location was my residence, where we would sit back and talk about whatever was on the boys' mind. Our goal is to listen and understand their problems and issues. Then we talk together to reach positive solutions to solve the problems. This way, the young men can think before they act, which sometimes results in unjustified punishment.

So, what we created is more than a mentoring program, a tutoring program, or a community service program. This is now a brotherhood of more than 20 young males with distinct personalities and different goals in life who are coming together to be a part of something positive. After researching some of these issues, we found that the majority of today's young men just want to be a part of something and that is why gang violence in the neighborhood is growing so rapidly.

The school system requires that students have a 2.0 GPA in order to play sports. What happens to those who try, but who just don't make it because of poor school systems or a lack of support from home? Where does he go? Who can he turn to? We believe that if a young man is trying to make himself a better man and a productive member of society, then we are PROUD of him—and we tell our young men that. We are proud of them and are here to push them to reach their full potential.

As a young man myself, some may wonder why I am trying so hard to reach these young men, as if I am their parent. Well, I believe that if the community is not encouraging our youth to stand tall and become someone special, what makes us think that the outside world will? After they are exposed to the world outside of their immediate community, reality hits them. They must be prepared and they must be shown the importance of responsibility and accountability and then they will go far in life.

During these teenage stages is when young men develop different characteristics which will continue to live within him during his entire adult life. Too often young men underestimate their own capabilities and greatness. It is our responsibility to step up to the plate and make a positive change. One young man at a time.

WESLEY BROWN,
Founder Young Men Enlightening Younger Men, Inc.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOCIERI). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

THE OFFICE OF CONGRESSIONAL ETHICS AND THE DIGNITY OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, recent press reports indicate that the House leadership is considering a rules change which would diminish the scope and authority of the Office of Congressional Ethics, or OCE. This is an apparent response to the OCE's decision to forward information gathered during its investigation of the PMA Group to the Justice Department, bypassing the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct in the process. The narrative seems to be that this is just another example of the OCE's succumbing to mission creep or of its growing beyond its intended purpose.

In the interest of full disclosure, I voted against the creation of the OCE in 2007. I felt at the time that the House should be able to establish appropriate standards and to police its behavior through the Standards Committee. I still believe that we should be able to do so, but this controversy over the OCE has effectively shown that, when it comes to removing the cloud that hangs over this body relating to earmarks and to campaign contributions, this body is unwilling, through the Standards Committee, to take the necessary action to uphold the dignity of the institution.

After an investigation lasting more than a year, during which some 200,000 pages of documentation were accumulated, the OCE concluded "there is evidence that some of the commercial entities seeking earmarks from Members of Congress believe that a political donation to the Member has an impact on the Member's decision to author an earmark for that donor."

This information was forwarded to the Standards Committee, which agreed with the conclusion drawn by the OCE. The Standards Committee summarized the OCE's findings as follows: "There is a widespread perception among corporations and lobbyists that campaign contributions provided enhanced access to Members or a greater chance of obtaining earmarks."

Then, quite inexplicably, the Standards Committee dropped the matter, stating that to address the problem is "not within the jurisdiction of the committee." Let me state that again. The Standards Committee said that it lacks the authority to establish a standard that will address what they conclude is a widespread perception of a link between earmarks and campaign contributions. This defies reason.

At the beginning of the 110th Congress, the House adopted rules requiring Members of Congress to certify that they have no "financial interest" in an earmark's being sponsored. "Financial interest" has been defined by the Standards Committee to include a direct or a foreseeable effect on the pecuniary interest for the Member or his or her spouse. The relevant section of the House Ethics Manual then states, "Campaign contributions do not necessarily constitute financial interest."

How can the Standards Committee lack the authority to set standards or to interpret rules? This is particularly confusing when one considers that the Standards Committee can address the issue by simply amending the interpretation of "financial interest" it has already promulgated in the House Ethics Manual.

One need not read very far into the Standards Committee's summary of the OCE's PMA investigation before realizing that Members, through their campaign committees, derive significant benefit from the "widespread perception" of a link between earmarks and campaign contributions. To pretend that this benefit does not constitute "financial interest" is no longer a viable option. We are no longer acting in ignorance. The "wink-wink-nod-nod" game, which we have all known to exist with regard to earmarks and campaign contributions, is now well documented, and the Standards Committee's definition of "financial interest" needs to be updated to reflect these findings.

So where do we go from here?

We can shoot the messenger, as press reports indicate many Members are inclined to do, but the problem with this approach is that the message about the link between earmarks and campaign contributions has already been delivered.

What we do with the OCE at this point is very much beside the point. It's little more than a sideshow. We need to concern ourselves with the dignity of the House. That is our collective responsibility. It does not fall outside of our jurisdiction.

As I have said many times before, Mr. Speaker, the PMA cloud that hangs over this body rains on Democrats and Republicans alike. We are in this swamp together, but we can't grab a shovel while we are covering our eyes and plugging our ears.

IMMEDIATE NEEDS FUNDING FOR FEMA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Ms. BALDWIN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring the voices of my constituents in Jefferson County, Wisconsin, to the floor of the people's House.

In 2008, homes along the northern shore of Lake Koshkonong and within the surrounding community were absolutely devastated by a record-setting flood. This was a 500-year flood event. It is the same one that ravaged much of the upper Midwest and, in particular, Wisconsin and Iowa.

During that storm, I knew that the damage was going to be devastating and that many of the houses in our community would be beyond repair. What I didn't know was that, almost 2 years after the floods, the agency upon which they relied would be leaving these hardworking Americans behind. You see, in February of this year,

FEMA instituted what it calls "immediate needs funding." Basically, they are freezing already approved funds to folks in Wisconsin and in other disaster areas across the country.

A couple of weekends ago, I had the chance to visit with property owners from my district, of whom I have the privilege of representing, who have been affected. They are survivors of the 2008 floods. I wanted to hear their stories. Many brought photos and letters. They brought their own unique stories. They brought their anger and their frustrations.

I met with Gene and Marie Harris at their home on Lamp Road, one of the most extensively damaged neighborhoods in this flood. The damage was so extensive that their house was absolutely uninhabitable and has been since the flood. They showed me photos of before, during, and after, and we talked about the tangle of bureaucratic red tape that they waded through in order to get approved for the FEMA dollars. They were approved for the FEMA money, but they haven't received a penny because of the funding freeze. When I asked Marie to recall what they had gone through back in June of 2008, not surprisingly, she welled up with tears.

Mr. Speaker, our hearts go out to the victims of the recent floods and of natural disasters. Yet I fear we suffer from that old adage, "Out of sight, out of mind." Once the cameras are packed away and the news crews leave for the next breaking story, what happens to the victims and survivors of these natural disasters? Will the families in Tennessee or in Arkansas suffer the same fate as Wisconsinites and Iowans? Will they see their funding from FEMA freeze even after it has been approved?

One would hope that the system of emergency response would keep on plugging away, assisting the families in need across this country, but we have seen that system completely break down. This is unacceptable.

It has been 2 years since their homes were devastated, and my neighbors are still living in temporary housing, and they are enduring financial chaos. One man is homeless. Another family is on the verge of bankruptcy because of the situation that FEMA has left them in.

I know this is wrong. My constituents know this is wrong. The Federal Government has to do better.

ENERGY INDEPENDENCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, this Nation has sent millions of good jobs to other countries over the last 30 or 40 years because of environmental rules, regulations, and red tape. This has hurt millions of poor and lower-income and working people by destroying jobs and driving up prices on everything.

The BP oil spill in the Gulf is a terrible thing, and we need to do all we reasonably can to see that something like this does not happen again. However, some extremists want us to stop offshore oil production entirely. Talk about wrecking our economy. Talk about killing countless numbers of jobs. And all this at a time when our unemployment is far too high and underemployment is even higher.

John Engler, the former Governor of Michigan, wrote a column 5 days ago in the Washington Times under the headline, "Drilling Moratorium is a Jobs Moratorium." Governor Engler wrote, "Our country cannot afford to use this accident as an excuse for an overbroad moratorium that stops progress to the detriment of our economic and national security. We do not need to choose between energy security and environmental safety. We need to continue to strive for both."

Charles Krauthammer, the TV commentator and columnist, is respected even by people with whom he disagrees as one of the smartest men in this city. He recently wrote a column asking why we were drilling in 5,000 feet of water in the first place. He wrote, "Environmental chic has driven us out there. Environmentalists have succeeded in rendering the Pacific and nearly all the Atlantic Coast off limits to oil production. And, of course, in the safest of all places, on land, we've had a 30-year ban on drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge."

Mr. Krauthammer is right. For many years, we have tried to allow drilling on about 2,000 or 3,000 acres of the Arctic Wildlife Refuge. ANWR is 19.8 million acres, some 35 times the size of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park. The Smokies get over 9 million visitors a year, and people think it is huge. They cannot humanly comprehend how big ANWR is, yet it is home to only a couple hundred people in the village of Kaktovik and gets a couple of hundred visitors each year. Yet radical environmentalists, who almost always come from very wealthy or upper-income families, oppose oil production almost everywhere. They want gas to double or triple in cost so people will drive less. They can't relate to people who cannot afford gas that costs $7 or $8 or $10 a gallon like it does in some other countries.

Not only would shooting the cost of gas way up cause the loss of huge numbers of jobs, it would put the final nail in the coffins of many small towns and rural areas. People in rural areas generally have to drive longer distances to get to their jobs. Already, two-thirds of the counties in the U.S. are losing population. Yet, once again, radical environmentalists see nothing wrong with this. Most of them are city people, anyway. They probably think it would be good if everyone was forced to live in 25 or 30 urban areas, with the rest of the country left totally empty and people could be bused to a national park or wilderness area every couple of months, under government supervision, of course, so they would not harm the land.

Everyone pays lip service to energy independence, but we already had 84 percent of our U.S. oil off limits even before the President imposed this latest moratorium. Environmental radicals will say they, too, want energy independence. But, then, environmental groups oppose drilling for oil, cutting any trees, digging for any coal, or producing any natural gas because of the pipelines and the refineries. And, heaven forbid, they certainly don't want more nuclear power.

The opposition varies from group to group and geographic location, but the environmentalists are always there to fight any kind of energy production except for solar and wind. But then some oppose the windmills, too. And solar energy, despite mega billions in government subsidies over the last 30 years, only produces one-seventh of 1 percent of our energy, and adding wind power only brings it up about 1 percent more.

If we limit this Nation to wind and solar, we might as well just shut the country down economically. And all these young people with degrees who are working as waiters and waitresses or in other low-paying jobs can thank the environmentalists. I told my wife as we were eating out last Saturday night, the American people used to work in factories and eat out just occasionally. Now, most of the factories have gone to other countries and restaurants have replaced the factories as our biggest employers other than government.

Now, a slight majority of our people get most of their income from Federal, State, or local government. When a country passes that threshold, it is on the way down. We need to wake up and realize that the worst polluters in the world have been the socialist and communist countries. And we need to realize that only a free market, free enterprise system can generate the money to do the good things for the environment that everybody wants done.

Charles Krauthammer wrote in another column a few months ago that, "socialism having failed so spectacularly, the left was adrift until it struck on a brilliant gambit: metamorphosis from red to green. The cultural elites went straight from the memorial service for socialism to the altar of the environment. The objective is the same: highly centralized power."

Once again, Mr. Krauthammer is right.

We certainly need to clean up the BP oil spill, but we should not let misguided radicals shut down our economy and hurt many lower- and middle-income people in the process.

PROSPECTS FOR PEACE IN THE MIDDLE EAST

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. GARAMENDI) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GARAMENDI. I was going to speak on a subject, and I will, but after listening to the previous speaker, I think a few comments are in order.

I think it was that great socialist, Richard Nixon, that happened to sign the Environmental Protection Act and the Clean Air Act. So maybe that's what you're talking about.

But to make the argument that somehow the environmental movement is responsible for the demise of American industries is just fallacious. It's a stretch of the imagination. In fact, there are many, many things involved, including free trade acts and international competition that's coming our way.

And if my colleague on the Republican side was so interested in this, he would have voted on the bill last week that would have brought back foreign earnings and closed the tax loopholes on those American corporations that have gone offshore—instead, bringing those back. I think, if I recall correctly, we didn't get one Republican vote on closing those loopholes that have allowed American corporations to offshore jobs. But I really wanted to take up another issue, and I will do so now.

I rise today to express my support for the right that all nations have to secure their borders in self-defense. Our close ally, Israel, shares a border with Gaza, a region controlled by the terrorist organization Hamas. Since 2001, thousands of rockets have been launched from Gaza into Israel, killing more than a dozen Israelis and wounding hundreds and terrifying that nation. We also know that Hamas receives material support from Iran, an international pariah that oppresses its own citizens while funding terrorist organizations throughout the region. For all these reasons, Israel has chosen to restrict imports to the Gaza Strip, insisting that all deliveries must be inspected to make sure that weapons are not smuggled into the territory.

Today, I call on Hamas leadership to reject their past support for terrorism, renounce violence, and embrace the two-state solution so that Israelis and Palestinians can live their lives freely, in peace, and security.

I also call on all powers in the Middle East to value human life and to do everything to avoid bloodshed. The loss of life in the flotilla incident was tragic, and I look forward to the findings of the recently formed Independent Public Commission, which will examine such issues as the naval blockade of Gaza, actions taken by the commandos during the flotilla incident, and the identities and conduct of the organizers and participants in the flotilla.

In the meantime, we must focus on avoiding escalation, preventing more violence, and continuing the peace process. The greatest tragedy would be to allow the flotilla incident to end the region's prospects for peace.

SUPPORT FOR ISRAEL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BROUN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BROUN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, in Genesis, chapter 12, verses 1 through 3, God tells Abraham that he will bless the nation that blesses his people, and curse the nation who curses his people.

God says in that verse, starting at verse 1, The Lord had said to Abraham, "Leave your country, your people, and your father's household and go to the land I will show you. I will make you into a great nation, and I will bless you. I will make your name great, and you will be a blessing. I will bless those who bless you, and whoever curses you, I will curse. And all people's on Earth will be blessed through you."

Mr. Speaker, God gave the land in Israel to the Israelites, to the Jewish people. They're a sovereign nation. They have a sovereign right to protect their borders, to protect their lives, to protect their country, to protect their valid claim to the land that God gave them.

Mr. Speaker, our Nation has supported Israel since it was reestablished in 1947 by an act of the United Nations. This country has supported Israel ever since then. We've been blessed as a Nation since then. But I'm very fearful that this administration is turning its back upon Israel. I'm very fearful that God's blessing that has been on this land, as promised in Genesis, chapter 12, verses 1 through 3, will cease if we cease supporting the nation of Israel.

Israel is a sovereign nation that's protecting itself. It has an absolute right to do so. Mr. Speaker, if we turn our back upon Israel, as I'm fearful that we're doing as a Nation through this administration, not only will we cease to have God's blessings, but we will also start receiving the curses from God that he promised in Genesis, chapter 12.

Mr. Speaker, if we don't support Israel, and just by being silent, just by turning our back upon Israel, then we're supporting Hamas. We're supporting Hezbollah. We're supporting Iran. President Ahmadinejad has stressed over and over again that he wants to annihilate Israel from the face of the Earth. We have to support Israel, Mr. Speaker. The consequences for our Nation are too dire not to.

God has put his blessings upon this country. And I think a big part of that is because this country was founded on the Judeo-Christian principles that have made this country so powerful, so rich, and so successful as a political experiment. But that blessing will cease if we ever turn our back upon Israel. We must not. We cannot. America must support Israel. Our administration must support Israel. And I call upon our country to continue to do so.

A TRIBUTE TO GOOD BREAD AND A FAMILY OF ENTREPRENEURS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from the Northern Mariana Islands (Mr. SABLAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SABLAN. The people of the Northern Mariana Islands love rice. Pre-contact with the West, the Marianas were the easternmost extent of the cultivation of rice. For us, a meal without rice is no meal.

Yet, ironically, one of our most cherished local businesses processes that great competitor of rice: Wheat bread. Pan mami and Pan toasta. These baked goods bring back mouthwatering memories for all of us in the Marianas. And the source of this goodness we most recall is Herman's Modern Bakery.

Perhaps, our devotion to Herman's has to do with the roots of that business in the ashes of war. Like the people of Israel beset by the Babylonians, as the people of the Marianas emerged from the trauma of World War II, "the famine was sore, so that there was no bread." We were starving and stored together in an internment camp in the days and months following the U.S. victory over the Japanese in 1944.

But the U.S. forces quickly began reorganizing society and reestablishing the ability of our community to care for itself. The occupying forces tapped the young Herman Reyes Guerrero to bake. Herman had previously apprenticed as a baker during the Japanese administration of the Northern Marianas, and he quickly agreed to return to this calling. He began baking bread for the U.S. troops, for Japanese prisoners of war, and for the Chamorro and Carolinian people of Saipan housed by the military in Camp Susupe.

As often happens after war, much materiel is left behind, cheaper to abandon than to return home. So it was at the close of World War II in the Pacific that the United States Navy simply gave Herman Guerrero the baking equipment the military had supplied for him to use.

□ 1830

With those ovens and mixers and the customer base he had already established, Herman opened Herman's Bakery. Not only was this the first bakery, this was the very first company founded in our postwar economy.

As the years went by, from that base of bread and baked goods, Herman's business grew. He opened the first hotel on the island of Saipan, a retail store, a laundromat, and a travel agency. In the early 1980s, following extensive expansion and upgrading, the bakery became known as Herman's Modern Bakery, and its products became ubiquitous throughout Micronesia. Today, the company's distribution chain includes several international franchises. You can even find Herman's cookies for sale on the Internet.

One of Herman Guerrero's fondest memories of his early baking career was a visit to the shop by Admiral Chester Nimitz, and throughout the following 65-plus years of growth, the close relationship between the United States military and the bakery continued. Today, as the U.S. build-up commences on Guam, Herman's has contracted as an authorized supplier, opening up a distribution facility and considering a bakery there. Herman's also regularly supplies the U.S. naval vessels that dock in Saipan for R&R. For just as many residents like to make Herman's our last stop on the drive to the airport—to take pan mami, guzuria and crocks of cookies away as gifts and comfort foods from home—so, too, the sailors of the U.S. fleet enjoy pulling away from the dock with Herman's sweets stocked in the galley.

From a humble one-man beginning, today, Herman provides jobs for over 110 individuals. A leading corporate citizen, Herman's is a strong supporter of civic, charitable, educational, and religious organizations, including the American Red Cross, the Commonwealth Health Center, the Rotary Club, the Northern Marianas College Foundation, the Saipan Chamber of Commerce, and nearly every school, church, and village fiesta on the islands of Saipan, Tinian, and Rota. The company piloted our school lunch program and has provided technical expertise to individuals on other islands in Micronesia who are opening or improving their own bakeries. With the recent establishment of the distribution center on Guam, the company has begun to expand its charitable support to that island, too.

Always, the bakery remains the heart of the family of companies and of the family of Herman Guerrero himself. All of the surviving children of Herman and his wife, Maria Tenorio Guerrero—Jesus, Agnes, Herman Jr., Juan, Florencio, Margarita, Anna, Rudolfo, Joseph, and Leonora—have worked at the bakery during significant portions of their adult lives. Herman was so identified with the bakery business that he came to be called by the nickname "Pan," which in the Chamorro language means "bread." Indeed, to this day, many of his children carry the "Pan" honorific as part of their own everyday names. For most of us in the Northern Mariana Islands, when we hear the word "pan," it's a tossup which comes first to mind: Herman Reyes Guerrero—Herman "Pan"—and his wonderful bakery, or just the wonderful baked goods that "Pan" produced.

PLEADING THE 10TH

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Utah (Mr. BISHOP) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BISHOP of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to plead the Tenth. Earlier today, this body voted on H.R. 4855 that would establish in the Department of Labor an annual work/life balance award for employers that have developed and implemented work/life balance policies. The bill would also establish an advisory board to administer the award. Now although I oppose this legislation, I want to make clear that I actually think that the ultimate goals of this bill are good ones. The sponsors had the best intentions. I want to repeat that. The goals and objectives of this bill are respectable, even noble ideas. No one questions that a proper work/life balance is extremely important. But just because something is important doesn't mean Washington has to write a law to protect it, or create a bureau to encourage it, or really have anything else to do with it. In fact, it's simply not the job of the Federal Government to promote good work/life balance.

Now there will be many more egregious bills in the future that will mandate by the Federal Government to States and locals and to the people behavior in certain circumstances, but not the incredibly worse bills that are out there withstanding. This Constitution makes the principle very clear: the Constitution gives Congress here in Washington certain powers that are limited. And in case we weren't clear on the concept or we didn't get it, it includes the Tenth Amendment which states: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." In other words, if a power is not assigned to the Federal Government in the Constitution, then it must be automatically assumed to be assigned to States, localities or to no government entity at all.

So just imagine that, Mr. Speaker. A problem in America not being solved with the involvement of the Federal Government. Some in this Chamber cannot envision such a world, but it can exist.

So I rise today to say that I do believe in the Constitution and the Tenth Amendment. I remain hopeful that the Congress will remember our limitations, begin to return the consideration of life's most important elements back to the States and local governments and churches and private groups and families where they really should be handled. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, on this particular issue, I plead the Tenth.

REPUBLICAN CONFERENCE BILLS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentlewoman from Wyoming (Mrs. LUMMIS) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mrs. LUMMIS. Mr. Speaker, tonight's discussion will be about bills that Members of the Republican Conference have sponsored that have not yet gotten a hearing that we still think are very good ideas for our country at this time of high debt, high deficits, and when regulation is being heaped on businesses that actually need the chains to be broken so they can pursue the American Dream of hiring people, creating jobs and fulfilling our role in the country and the world, which is to feed people, clothe people, create jobs, create wealth, create opportunity and so that all Americans have the opportunity to do so without being shackled by the Federal Government.

With me this evening is BOB LATTA, who is from one of the most diverse districts in the entire United States. It has everything from agriculture to manufacturing, and it has experienced every up and down that is possible for one district to experience. During the course of this evening, Mr. LATTA and I hope that we will have the opportunity to refer you frequently to www.americanroadmap.org, which is a draft of the Budget Committee on which we both serve, an opportunity that provides Americans the chance to get out of debt and to eliminate the deficit, and to comprehensively do so without raising taxes.

It takes a long time, but it creates a very smooth landing for our country. And we also want to refer you to www.americaspeakingout.com.

Americaspeakingout.com is an official function of the Republican Conference here in the U.S. House which allows you to weigh in on ideas that you have for our country that will make it stronger, safer, more efficient, more cost effective and will unshackle this Nation's economy in a way that will allow us to once again pursue our role as a global leader in terms of innovation and jobs.

So at this time I would like to yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATTA).

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentlelady for yielding. This is a very important issue that we are talking about: jobs, small businesses, and how we can get this country moving. I rise tonight to discuss a bill that I have sponsored, H.R. 1763, which is the Responsible Reinvestment Act of 2009. But before I do, I would just like to make a couple of comments, as the gentlelady just said, about the uniqueness of my district.

I have the number one manufacturing district in the State of Ohio. I also have the number one agricultural district in the State of Ohio. And about 2 years of this time, according to the National Manufacturers Association, I had the ninth largest number of manufacturing jobs in the United States House of Representatives. But because of the recession that we've seen happen across the country, I have dropped to about 20th, which is totally unacceptable because last summer we had unemployment rates raging across our district and across the State and the country. Two of my counties had over 18 percent unemployment. I had four others over 16 percent. So we have to do something in this country to get this country moving.

It's kind of interesting. We talk about having a district that's number one in manufacturing and also a district that's number one in agriculture. So how did that work? Well, I have so many of my farmers that work full time off the farm, but they work full time on the farm. So like my relatives who also live in my district, you know, they're working a lot more than 40-hour weeks, and they are making sure that the American economy keeps moving, they are making sure that Americans are fed, but they are also making sure that we don't have to rely on foreign countries for our food, like we have to do when it comes to oil, relying on foreign countries for our needs.

So we need jobs. We need jobs that are created by the private sector. We don't need any government jobs that are really just make-work jobs out there. Small businesses continue to bear the burden of this economic slowdown, and they need relief to be able to survive and continue to remain in business. Currently, small businesses employ over half the private sector workers in America. To assist small business owners, I introduced the Responsible Reinvestment Act. Specifically, this bill focuses on the following areas that I believe will not only help small businesses grow throughout the country but also help put our neighbors back to work.

The bill does the following: a 20 percent tax cut for small business is equal to 20 percent of the total income of the business. It permanently repeals the estate tax, or the death tax. You know, we have to do something in this Congress because if we do not act by the end of this session, the death tax will revert to where it was 10 years ago without any adjustment to inflation, and that will hit small businesses and farmers alike. So, again, this bill repeals the death tax; it increases the expensing for small businesses to $500,000; a full first-year expensing for farm and manufacturing equipment; and the full deductibility for the self-employment tax in relation to health premiums, which is extremely important for small businesses across this country.

The items in this bill will also be very beneficial to small business owners by freeing up capital for them to use to reinvest in their business. And through doing that, it will bring stability back to the communities in which they exist.

The future of our country depends on a proactive approach to creating viable solutions for small business owners to exceed and remain profitable. Small businesses are the lifeline and the heartbeat of our Nation's economy, as these are the companies that we rely on for products and services. As a Congress, we must absolutely stop passing legislation that contains massive spending and, instead, pass legislation like H.R. 1763 that will help small businesses rather than hurt them.

President Obama submitted his administration's fiscal year 2011 budget proposal with a record-breaking cost of $3.8 trillion. This budget proposal includes a $2 trillion tax increase over the next 10 years and projected record deficits. This proposal will double our Nation's debt in 5 years and triple it in 10 years from fiscal year 2008 levels.

The Congressional Budget Office has stated that under current spending levels, by 2020 American taxpayers will be paying $2 billion a day in interest on the national debt alone. And, again, let me reiterate that—$2 billion a day. I think we have to understand what this is going to do. It hasn't been all that long ago that we look back to the late seventies and early eighties when we had 21.5 percent interest rates in this country. And it wasn't very long ago I was talking with some small business owners in my district, and they said, Well, we even had problems getting a loan at over 26 percent interest.

Now, if the Federal Government is borrowing over $2 billion a day—and you know, when you are talking about that, you are looking at the Federal deficit or, I should say, the debt going to $20.3 trillion by the year 2020, and now the U.S. Treasury is coming out and saying that that could be at least $26 trillion, that $2 billion a day is going to be much higher, and businesses out there are going to have to do one thing—compete against government to borrow. That means the interest rates are going to skyrocket again, and how are we going to get small businesses moving again in this country?

Mrs. LUMMIS. Will the gentleman yield briefly?

Mr. LATTA. Absolutely. I yield to the lady.

Mrs. LUMMIS. That $2 billion a day you just mentioned, that would only take either 3 or 4 days for the entire budget of the State of Wyoming for 2 years. That covers our whole budget. It's a stunning number. That's how much money we're talking about.

And I yield back.

Mr. LATTA. I thank the lady for yielding back. Because again, you know, when you are looking at these staggering numbers—I'm sure Wyoming, like the State of Ohio, in our Constitution we have to balance our budget. I was a county commissioner for 6 years when I was first elected to public service. We went through the '91-'92 downturn at that time. And what did we have to do? Well, we had to cut back. We didn't just say we have to spend more. We had to cut.

Mrs. LUMMIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I yield to the lady.

Mrs. LUMMIS. How did you cut?

□ 1845

Mr. LATTA. Well, what we had to do was when we did our budget for the year, there are certain things in Ohio that the commissioners are responsible for. You looked at things. You thought, we have to budget for things like bad weather because you have to have more overtime.

One of the things that we always hoped we never have happen was a capital murder case because we know how much that would cost. We had to sit down with all of the other elected officials and say, We have to make cuts across the board and scale back. If we didn't, we were going to be in trouble. Again, our Constitution says you shall balance your budget.

Mrs. LUMMIS. Are you aware of any circumstance since you have been in Congress where the Members of Congress in the leadership have been called to the White House to sit down and talk about how we are going to cut spending?

Mr. LATTA. Again, this is a problem we are facing. Instead of saying we are going to increase certain budgets by 12 percent over the year before, we have to go back maybe a budget before that and say that is where we need to start the cuts. One of the things that is happening with small businesses across the country, or large businesses, when I go across my district and when I have the opportunity, I try to go to as many factories and businesses as I can. And when I am talking to these individuals, I like to find out what is happening to them.

But they like to ask this one question: We have cut way back to keep our doors open; what have you done in the Federal Government to help along these lines?

I think one of the interesting trips I was in was at a factory in my district. I went into the plant and they had to scale back. They had to unfortunately cut employees. But at the same time they were in there saying we had to reduce the number of hours people were working. So maybe it was not 40-plus hours, but it was a 32-hour work week. Then they said we have to make sure that management does their share. They were cut 10–20 percent in their salary. And management was cleaning the restrooms in the factory to try to help do anything to scale back on costs that they would pay someone else to do.

Mrs. LUMMIS. Is there any instance where the Federal Government has done the same thing? Has the Federal Government gone to its employees and said, We need to cut you back to 32-hour weeks so we can keep you employed, keep you on your benefits so you don't lose your health care, but we need to save some money. Are you aware of that?

Mr. LATTA. Again, I think we would have heard it if something like that would have happened. But at this stage of the game, the Federal Government has a trump card some people think, and that we control the printing presses for putting out money. The big problem is we watch dollars being put out, but at the same time the United States Treasury is out there at an auction, and at that auction you have the Federal Reserve buying it, and all of a sudden we are monetizing our debt. We are moving one IOU from one pocket to the other. We are not accomplishing anything. We are not cutting anything. And we watch expenses keep rolling up.

The American people understand that what we do at home when we sit around our kitchen tables and you get out the family budget and say these are the things that we are going to have to pay for. It is the question of wants and needs. There is a big difference between what I want and what I absolutely need. I think the Federal Government has got to go to what is needed, and we are going to have to start scaling back immediately.

I am sure you have students and constituents who come here. When I had a group of students here today on the Capitol steps, and I look at these kids, juniors or seniors in high school, I look at what their future is for the next 10 years, and I don't care if it is $20.3 trillion in debt or $26 trillion in debt, according to the Treasury, we are in trouble.

Mrs. LUMMIS. What do you hear from your constituents? Do they believe that they are ready for the kind of reforms that you believe are necessary to save our country?

Mr. LATTA. I thank the gentlelady. I think what you are looking at is from the small business owners. They understand right off the bat that something has to be done. They understand that they have had to make deep, deep cuts.

Until recently, I served on the Budget Committee, and you are still a member. Sitting through those hearings with the Congressional Budget Office director or the Office of Management and Budget director or Secretary Geithner or when we heard from Mr. Bernanke, we heard the same thing: we are on an unsustainable growth of spending in this country. It has got to be stopped. They don't offer a solution, but it is a very simple solution: you don't spend what you don't have.

I was one of 19 grandkids on my maternal side. I will never forget my grandmother, the good German farm woman she was, she had a simple saying, that he who goes a borrowing goes a sorrowing. She pretty much made sure that all 19 of us understood that. Again, you don't spend what you don't have because we cannot spend our way out of this mess. If we are going to be doing that, all we are doing right now, and have been doing, is mortgaging the future of the next generation of Americans.

You know, the question when you talk to parents out there and say are your kids going to be better off than you are, most parents don't believe it. They think that their kids are going to have a harder time of it than they have, and that is a bad sign for America's future.

Mrs. LUMMIS. The chart I have to my left, the viewer's right, is exactly illustrating what the gentleman has just been discussing. If you look at the spread between spending and taxes that occurs on the far side of the dotted line, that shows you what is projected into the future. That spread between spending and taxes going into the future is enormous and consistent. And if you look at what that produces in terms of deficits, look at the bottom line, the red line again on the far side away from me from the dotted line, and you can see that deficits are projected into the future. When we say unsustainable, that's what we mean. The long-term consequences to this country is that our children and grandchildren will inherit the consequences of our reckless behavior. How do we resolve this?

Mr. LATTA. Well, when you look at these budget projections, you have to have people working. When we are looking at an unemployment rate of 9.7 percent in this country and a little under 11 percent unemployment in the State of Ohio, and we all know what is going to happen later this summer when all of those people who were hired to be census takers, working for the census are going to be back on unemployment, these numbers are going to go right back up because it kind of is a false data time that we are in right now when we are looking at these numbers.

Of course we saw what happened when the unemployment numbers came out and only 41,000 jobs had been created in the private sector, what Wall Street thought of that. They are looking at things are not going well for this economy.

I know you heard these same statements that were projections from the Congressional Budget Office director when he was before the Budget Committee. We are looking at probably 2014 or 2015 before we get back to, and I don't care if you want to say normal employment or normal unemployment in this country. The question is for areas that are hard hit like a lot of parts of Ohio and a lot of parts of the Midwest where manufacturing takes place, what are we going to do in our areas for the next 4 or 5 years with these high unemployment rates? Where are people going to go?

Mrs. LUMMIS. This chart illustrates exactly what the gentleman is discussing. If you look at the blue line, that is private sector employment. That is employment in the entrepreneurial economy. This is employment that comes from the employer class of Americans. If you look at the red line, the skyrocketing government employment, that is just that. It is the Federal Government attempting to replace the private sector with public sector jobs. The only problem is a public sector employee pays the same taxes that a private sector employee does. However, the public sector employee's salary comes entirely from private sector employment and the taxes generated by it. There is no way that we can sustain an economy of totally government employees when we have lost the private sector jobs, the kinds of jobs that Mr. LATTA has been referring to this evening in his district.

Mr. LATTA. One of the things that we are talking about, those jobs, and it goes back years ago when I was a county commissioner. You wanted to make sure you had as broad a tax base as possible in your county or State or country. It is like a pyramid. You want as big a base on that as possible. But the thing we were worried about, what happens if? We were losing jobs and we had fewer and fewer people. All of a sudden that starts shifting that base, and pretty soon you have a very small tax base out there of individuals, and you have a lot of other people up on top. It doesn't work.

What we can't have in this country is killing the entrepreneurs. When you look at all of these different scenarios out there, the bills that have come before this Congress, and these are the same people that I talk to in my district. And again, when you are dealing with the largest manufacturing district in the State, 20th largest in the Nation, they are concerned. I hear all the time about the issues out there that will help bring them down, is about the best way to say it.

You know, we have the second highest corporate tax rate in the world. What are we doing about that here?

When we talk about the health care costs, a lot of them are saying when they hit that certain magical number, when they get above it, they are asking why do I want to expand if I will be paying more. It won't work. Folks in business understand it. It gets to the point of economics 101 from your first year of college which is the law of diminishing returns. It is the more I work, the more I get taxed, and the less I have; why do it? People aren't going to do that. It is against human nature to do something like that.

Mrs. LUMMIS. Would you recommend reducing the corporate tax rate?

Mr. LATTA. We have to go across the board. If we are going to compete against our foreign competitors, and that is who is out there today. Because when we look at a lot of these regulations that are coming down on businesses, you look at the corporate tax rate and you look at what has happened here with health care, we have seen these numbers coming out today of what is going to happen on the health care side. They are saying you get to keep what you want; well, that is not going to happen for a lot of individuals.

When you look at the regulations, companies are saying we don't have to worry about that if we are someplace else. I have had companies that are located in a village or city, and when the EPA puts a mandate in for water or sewer, but the parent company is some place outside the State, and they are told if their rates go up to a certain amount and they are no longer profitable in their area, well that company is going to be moved. When you are looking at losing 300 jobs or 400 jobs or 600 jobs, that is totally unacceptable.

Mrs. LUMMIS. Are you aware of any employers in your manufacturing district that have pulled up stakes and moved their businesses elsewhere?

Mr. LATTA. That happens all of the time, unfortunately. We have situations where we are competing. I know years ago when I was a county commissioner, we were competing against many other parts of the State of Ohio or maybe someplace in southern Michigan or eastern Indiana. In a short 20-year period, now we are competing with somebody 8,000, 12,000 miles away. If they are in a situation where they have lower labor cost, and if they have lower cost for their electricity or other fuel costs, and we are all for clean air and clean water, but if they are in certain areas where there is no concern for that, and we have heard under the cap-and-trade legislation, if we did everything that was asked for under this piece of legislation that passed out of the House, in 8 years there would be absolutely no difference in CO<sub>2</sub> emissions. Why, because China and India would be making that amount up. But at the same time, we would have lost all of those jobs in this country. Those jobs would have moved someplace else.

Mrs. LUMMIS. Are you aware of any manufacturer that has moved into your district from a foreign country, saying this is a better place to do business? It's more economical here? I can make a better profit here?

Mr. LATTA. I thank the lady for yielding.

This is the problem you run into. In my opinion, I truly believe that the United States has the greatest workforce in the world. We have the best trained workforce. We have the best educated workforce, but we just need to be put on an equal footing. And when companies understand that—you know, it's just like with that small entrepreneur.

If they toil day after day—I knew somebody that, to get their company started, they had a small bed that could roll up in their office. And his wife would come in and help work, and she slept on the couch. But, you know, they put hours and hours and hours into that business, first of all, to get it off the ground, to grow it, and then to make it successful.

But if you put the roadblocks in front of these people, you know, some folks aren't going to be as steadfast as they were, and they are going to say, You know what? It's just not worth it. Why kill myself? And I think that, again, it's the spirit of entrepreneurship in this country that makes this country work.

It's like when I talk to these kids on the Capitol steps. You know, why did a lot of our relatives ever get on—some people's relatives came on the Mayflower. Most of ours came on the Poorflower. And when people got off that boat, and my relatives came down by barge on the Ohio River, and they came up the canal system, and they cleared the land, and they started farming in Putnam County in Ohio. They had a desire. They wanted land. They wanted to grow that land. They wanted to make sure that they had something not only for themselves but for their kids. They wanted a future. And I think that's what we are losing track of in this body and in this Congress, that what's happened is that it's no longer about the future, but too many are thinking, "It's about me." And the problem with "me" is we are not growing it. And we have to grow the "we" and the "us" to make this country successful.

Mrs. LUMMIS. My daughter did a study for an economics professor about externalities, meaning decisions you don't necessarily see in black and white on a business plan, that might affect a Wyoming rancher's decision to stay in agriculture or leave agriculture. Because we know that in Wyoming agriculture, especially beef production agriculture—of course, there are no subsidies in beef production agriculture in Wyoming, and other States as well.

So the largest group in Wyoming are those that make from 0 to 4 percent profit. The second largest group are those that make from 0 to minus 4 percent profit. And after looking at many factors of what would motivate a person to stay in a business where the profit margin is that low, the answer for especially second, third, and fourth generation ranchers was the ability to pass it on to my children, to give my children a better life, to give my kids the ranch.

Now, Mr. LATTA has mentioned two things that are of concern if a person's motivation is to give their children a better standard of living, a better life, an opportunity, a shot that maybe they didn't have or that they have enjoyed and they just want their children to have as well. You mentioned that next year the estate tax is going to go back up to a maximum amount of 55 percent of the value of the estate, with only a $1 million exemption; whereas, this year there is no estate tax whatsoever.

Think about that and how that will affect you if you have spent your entire life building something with the one motivation of giving that to your children or your grandchildren. That is going to be devastating. Many people I know would accept a smaller estate tax with a higher exemption, but no one I know is going to be satisfied that a 55 percent tax on your life's work that you wish to pass on to your children is anything but a taking. And takings are unconstitutional under our Fifth Amendment. I mean, that's how people look at it.

And, you know, if you worked your whole life for something 7 days a week, not 5 days a week, not 40-hour weeks, but every minute of every day that you are awake, growing your family, growing your business, growing their opportunities, creating a community, creating the kind of American Dream that so many people came here with nothing and then built over their lifetimes or their parents built over their lifetimes and want to pass on to their children.

The other point you made that I think is going to affect that American Dream is our debt, is these running deficits that are unsustainable over time. Because if we mount our children and our grandchildren with debt, it will crowd out private investment. If we are spending the entire Federal budget, all of our tax dollars on the combination of entitlement programs and interest on the national debt, we have crowded out the opportunity for private investment as well as for discretionary spending within our economy.

I yield back to the gentleman to tell us more about the consequences of these bad policies and the kinds of bills that he has proposed to change all that.

Mr. LATTA. Well, you have touched on something when you are talking about the death tax, the estate tax. And, you know, when you are talking about something going from having zero death tax this year, which won't ever happen because, you know, there will be a retroactive clause put in somewhere saying that they are never going to let people off the hook, and they are going to say anybody that passed away this year, somehow they will try to bring them back up, and I am sure the lawsuits will begin.

But you are right about a couple things right off the bat. You know, family businesses, family farms, I know it's difficult for some folks when you are only looking at a very small percentage of about less than 2 percent of Americans now that make their livelihoods from the farm. And when you go to your local county fairs and you go to look at these implements and the costs, and when you are talking about a $425,000 combine with one head, or you are looking at a couple hundred thousand dollars for a tractor, and you start adding all these pieces of machinery up. People say, well, if you have got a couple million dollars you are rich. Well, most farmers that I know are land rich and cash poor.

And what happens in a lot of cases or a small business, what do they have to do? Well, number one, okay, they have to start doing estate planning early on. And I am an attorney by trade. But when you start talking about that we have to tell the American people they have to expend millions and billions of dollars when it comes to estate planning or doing the taxes every year, we should simplify this. But, also, we shouldn't be taking what they have worked hard for. And when people are out there thinking, Is it going to be worth it in the end?

Because this will be—you know, if we get to a point in this country, people are going to say, You know what? If the government's going to take it in the end and I can't pass it on, what are they going to do? Either, A, I am not going to work that hard, or, B, I am just going to spend it. And if they spend it, what's going to be the result of that? They are going to say, Government, you take care of me now. I am not going to worry about my livelihood or I am not going to worry about down the road when it's time for me to retire. Just have the government take care of me. And that's not going to work.

So, you know, we have got to keep this entrepreneurship. We have got to make sure that people in this country have the ability and the thought that they can succeed. You know, a lot of people sometimes are jealous of people that come here as new immigrants to this country, but the thing that they know is they come to this country like a lot of our ancestors did. They want to make something of themselves. They want to make something of their future. They want to have something for their kids. But when you kill that entrepreneurial spirit, that's when the beginning of the end becomes.

And you know, it's kind of interesting. There used to be a saying years ago before the fall of the Soviet Union that the people pretended to work and the government pretended to pay them. And we never want to have that happen in this country, where people get to the thought that there is this hopelessness, that there is no reason to do it. We want to make sure that the people have the ability in this country to get ahead.

And I yield to the lady.

Mrs. LUMMIS. The gentleman has mentioned a couple of things that are important to recreating a vibrant economy and to taking the shackles off of American business, and tax policy is high on the list. The fact that we could have an estate tax that is much smaller in terms of its impact on a family, and the American people would accept that is in fact the case. I hear it over and over in this country. We have also heard that it would be helpful in terms of American competitiveness for us to reduce our corporate tax so we are more globally competitive.

Among the provisions that anyone can read about is in americanroadmap.org, and that is the proposal to create a flat income tax. That would be a rate, such as 10 or 11 percent, that you would pay on all of your income, regardless of source, regardless of whether it's active or passive, whether it is capital or income from a job, whether it is rental income, royalty income, or, again, active income. All sources of income would be taxed at 10 or 11 percent.

So you take all your income annually times 10 percent or 11 percent. Maybe you have a deduction of $20,000, so your first $20,000 worth of income isn't taxed. And then whatever that amounts to, you just write a check and send it in to the IRS. You don't need to have CPAs help you fill out your tax returns. And I can tell you, if we did that, it would save the American people a lot of money. We would garner a lot of tax revenue that we aren't collecting now because of the efforts and machinations that people go through to try to protect as much of their income as they can from being taxable because, A, there is no way to avoid it, whether you are rich or poor; and, B, it's predictable. You know that the person across the aisle from you at work or at church is also paying 10 or 11 percent, whatever it is, of their paycheck.

That sounds so fair to me. It sounds so logical. And yet that is something that is so hard to change with all of the interest groups that affect the appearance and shape of our Tax Code.

I do want to encourage, as we go along, everyone to go into AmericaSpeakingOut.com and weigh in on ideas that we have proposed to reduce the Federal debt and deficit and stimulate the economy and take the shackles off the American entrepreneur. And also to just weigh in and give your own thoughts about how we might do it.

I would like to talk about one of the bills that I have sponsored, and it's a way to reduce the number of Federal employees without firing anybody. It is a bill that would provide that if you look at the curve off here to my left, your right, you will see Federal employment in the year 2010, which is the farthest bar away from me, has absolutely skyrocketed. And this is Federal Government employment full-time equivalents excluding the Postal Service. So it has just grown leaps and bounds.

Now, how do we soften the landing for those people that were hired in a way that will allow our economy to return to normal so we can begin to reduce all this deficit spending? And the answer is for every person who retires or voluntarily vacates a position, that vacated position, that vacant position would be moved into a position pool, and only half of the positions would be moved in the position pool. Then the executive branch of government, run out of the President's office, would have to determine whether that position was essential to that agency and needed to be placed back in that agency and then filled with an employee, or whether that position should be moved to another agency that had a more impactful mission on our American economy and on our government regulatory needs.

So it's a way over a 10-year period to reduce the number of Federal employees through attrition. They leave. Their position becomes vacant. Half of those positions go away. That saves about $70 billion. Not a small amount of money.

Some of the other ideas that Republicans have filed go way back to the stimulus package. We sponsored a bill that would have stimulated economic growth; in fact, it would have created twice as many jobs at half the cost of the majority party's $787 billion stimulus package. How did we do it? We did it by investing in infrastructure instead of earmarks and by cutting taxes. This is something I believe, Mr. LATTA, that you and I both supported.

Mr. LATTA. Thank you very much for yielding, and again, you go back to the Responsibility Investment Act again, you were talking about cutting taxes here and what we can do to really get things moving. Again, if you get rid of and make permanent the repeal of the death tax, well, what happens? People are going to say, now I can invest that money back into the business instead of going out saying, how am I going to try to soften the blow when the taxes finally come, you know, through buying insurance or, you know, going to multiple years of tax planning on how you're going to get this thing done?

And I'm sure everybody this year is going crazy with the thought that the death tax comes screaming back at the $1 million level at the end of this year, and you have a lot of folks with their A and their B trusts already funded where they're supposed to be, and they're going to say, now what am I supposed to do? So it's right back doing what? You know, it's not just the money that people invest, it is also the time. If you think how much time is invested by businesses to try to figure out how they have to cope with all these taxes and regulations out there, I think that that's one of the important things out there.

Again, in a piece of legislation that I have on the Responsibility Investment Act, again, repealing that death tax, we're talking about what we can do on the small business side. You know, if we're doing a 20 percent cut for small businesses and 20 percent tax cut for businesses, that's going to allow those businesses to take up to a 20 percent deduction equal to their income. And it's regardless of whether they're paying corporate or personal income tax.

So those are things we have to do to try to make sure that we get businesses back moving in this country again, and again, we just can't expect folks out there to say, you know what, I'm going to work like a dog 24 hours a day, 7 days a week for X number of years to try to get this off the ground and then have to watch it all be taken away from me.

Mrs. LUMMIS. You know, among the other pieces of legislation that Republicans have sponsored includes reducing our salaries or freezing our salaries, freezing government salaries, reducing spending across the board. There have been Republican proposals, anything from 1 percent to 5 percent to 10 percent. There have been Republican proposals that would take spending, as Mr. LATTA referred to earlier, back to 2008 levels or even 2006 levels. You know, we had enough government then. There were not a lot of complaints that, my gosh, we don't have enough government; we need to spend more on government.

So we could take spending back to 2006 or 2008 levels, and I don't believe the American people, other than those who have benefited specifically by being employed by those Federal agencies and Federal programs, would notice the absence of that money, and in fact, they'd probably benefit mightily because it would save so much money that interest payments on the debt and the deficit would be reduced, and we would not have to borrow so much money.

A couple weeks ago here in Washington, some U.S. Treasuries were issued. They are issued every day that we are working, Monday through Friday. There's a sale of U.S. Treasury bonds because we are going into debt so much we have to sell Treasuries every day. This particular issue was under-subscribed. That means there were not enough buyers for the money that we attempted to sell, and the reason is that for the risk that the buyers were taking, they wanted a higher rate of interest. They wanted a better return. When you take more risk on an investment you're purchasing, you want a higher rate of return.

As soon as we have to start paying higher interest in order to attract buyers to our debt, we are ensuring that our children and grandchildren are going to be saddled with higher interest payments once again, crowding out other investments in our economy. These are the kinds of things that absolutely stifle economic growth in our country and encourage some businesspeople, as was mentioned by Mr. LATTA, to move their businesses elsewhere.

We do know that, for example, in the Gulf of Mexico right now, with the moratorium on drilling and no end in sight to when it might be lifted, that there are drill rigs that are considering moving to that tremendous oil and gas find off the coast of Brazil. If one of those enormous rigs is moved off to the coast of Brazil, it will be 5 years before it comes back. It's not going to move back at a moment's notice. That takes so many thousands of jobs away from workers in Louisiana. So they're doubly punished. They're punished because their shores are polluted by oil from the Deepwater Horizon rig which exploded, destroying the fishing industry and retarding the tourism industry. And then they're adding insult to injury; the oil and gas employees lose their jobs in areas where you could drill at a shallower depth or a medium depth in a much more safe and well-understood manner. This is the wrong reaction.

You know, the President is speaking later this evening about the situation in the Gulf, and what I would note about that is, we can't legislate our way out of the damage and the devastation to the Gulf. We have to clean it up, and we have to make BP pay for it. Those are our alternatives: Clean it up; make BP pay for it.

The President, if he had had executive experience, would likely have called the head of BP within 48 or 72 hours of that oil spill and said, I want you on a conversation with me every single day at a specific time. I want you and me and the Coast Guard and the Governors of the affected States and anyone else who is able to help us clean up this mess, and they could get on the call every day at the same time. The President could have opened a call, and he could have said, I'm not going to stay on this call for more than a minute, but I'm going to tell you that the people on this call are responsible to the people of this Nation to make sure that that oil does not get to our shores, and I want you to do everything possible. BP has said they will pay for it. BP is on this call, and are you assuring us you will pay for it? I mean, under which circumstances, they would have said, yes. And it could have proceeded that way every day with the President's full support for the Governors' requests, for the Coast Guard's requests, for repealing the effects of the Jones Law, which inhibited our ability of getting other countries to help us in the response. All of that could have been handled if it would have begun earlier enough.

But the fact that there was an effort to run away and avoid the problem and deal with it not until it was just completely out of control is, I believe, an indication of someone who had legislative skills and not executive skills. There is such a difference. We cannot legislate our way out of the situation, and we should not have a cap-and-tax bill as a response to a devastating accident that may be the worst ecological disaster we've ever had, because taxes are not going to change it.

BP has said they're going to pay the bill. To do otherwise would be to impose taxation on the people in this country who can least afford it, those of low and moderate income who are trying to make ends meet at a time when unemployment is still 9.7 percent, at a time when we should be helping them find jobs, not imposing a moratorium on safe drilling, that takes jobs away from them. The Gulf is just one example of where that's true.

And I yield back.

Mr. LATTA. I thank the gentlelady for yielding and a couple of your earlier points, you know, you were talking about pay here in Washington. I've got a bill that hasn't had any hearings, and what that bill says is that there are no COLAs anymore for Congress. If you think you deserve a pay raise, then you should introduce a piece of legislation saying that, and what this bill would do is say no more COLAs, period. We wouldn't have a 1-year freeze or a 2-year freeze; this bill would say no more COLAs.

Again, going back to what you said on that interest on that debt, and I mentioned a little bit earlier about going back to the early 1980s, with that 21.5 percent interest rate that people experienced. I was first starting to practice law that year, and I'll never forget, we had to do land contracts. And what a land contract, of course, is, say you want to buy my house, well, you couldn't go to the bank and get a loan because you couldn't borrow any money. So I would have to, as the owner of the home, would sell you the house. We would have a contract that you pay me the principal and interest over about a 3-year period of time, and hopefully, at the end of that 3 years, then you would find a bank that you could go out to and get a loan from.

We don't want to see this go back, like I said, to where we had 21.5 percent interest. We don't want to go back to have some businesses out there at over 26 percent. When the Federal Government is out there, as you said, you know, if they have to start raising the interest rates to make it more profitable or for either the country—of course, right now, we know $3.7 trillion of our debt is owned by foreign countries, and you know, we're only seeing that only grow, where they will control more of our public debt than anybody else.

So it's important that we get this under control because we cannot have interest rates that high into future. Businesses will stagnate. Businesses will not have the ability to go out and borrow money. And that's what we're going to be looking at. We'll be staring that in the face in a very short period of time, and what we need to make sure is that businesses can go down to that local bank on the corner, that people can go down to that bank on the corner and draw money and also loan money from that bank because, again, if we're in a situation that we were, you know, having learned that a lifetime ago already, not too many years, but back in a situation that we would be in where we were before, we can't compete.

And something else I guess we're kind of forgetting, when you look back on some of these statistics, maybe 10, 20, or 30 years ago, the United States was pretty much at the top of the heap. We could make some odd, dumb mistakes along the line, but we could correct them pretty quick because we controlled about everything. Not anymore. When you're looking where the Chinese want to be in the next 10 to 15 years and where other global competitors are, we're not going to be there. So that's why the United States and this Congress cannot misstep at any time, from now or into the future, because our future, not only for this generation but the generations to follow, are at stake.

Mrs. LUMMIS. Mr. LATTA has announced a call to action for all Americans, and we are attempting as a Republican Conference to solicit ideas and priorities from all Americans, regardless of party affiliation.

Please visit americaspeakingout.com.

This will provide an innovative online forum for policy debate and idea generation. It gets us outside of Washington to talk about policy solutions at town hall meetings across the Nation. It allows us to discuss how our principles of freedom and smaller government could be applied to the priorities of the American people.

In time, we will produce a new governing agenda for America guided by this open process and built on our conservative principles, and we want to demonstrate that Congress should pursue different policies and operate this House more responsibly than both Democrats and previous Republican majorities. And if I hear something all the time on the Republican side of this room, it is that we don't want to treat the Democrats the way we used to treat them, and we don't want to be treated the way the Democrats have treated us.

I really believe that the 112th Congress that begins in January could be a new beginning for our country. It will only be so if the American people say it will be so because the American people are the ultimate governors of this country, and they govern with their vote, and they will have an opportunity in November to vote.

So please visit americaspeakingout.com. Give us your ideas. We want to know. We want to build a working, bipartisan majority with the American people so we are legislating what the American people want, not what liberals want, not what conservatives want, what the American people want.

So americaspeakingout.com is a state-of-the-art Web site that allows individuals to suggest ideas of their own or weigh in on ideas offered by others. Everyone can see the ideas that are on the table, make comments on them, and register their approval or disapproval.

This Web site brings the Halls of Congress into American homes and uses the best of social media to allow America's many voices to be heard.

And we would conclude by saying, to change the way Washington works and the policies it pursues, it will require Washington to listen when America speaks out, and we hope all Americans will join us in this unprecedented process of engagement.

For concluding remarks, I yield back to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LATTA. I would just like to conclude on a statement that was made as you talk about Americans getting reinvolved.

Again, when I speak to the students on our steps here at the United States Capitol, I can't think of a better place to tell kids what they have to do. But one of the interesting things, especially when I have seniors in high school and I say, how many of you are registered to vote, I remember one day we had about 100 students out there, and I probably had maybe 20 percent of the kids sheepishly start trying to raise their hands. They were going to put them down and I said, wait a minute, leave your hands up. I said, I want everyone to look at who has their hands up because they're going to be making the decisions for you. I said, if you want to participate in this great experiment, you have got to be registered, you have got to be involved.

It kind of goes back to what Benjamin Franklin said. It was reported when he left the Constitutional Convention—it was very contentious—a lot of people think it was just fine and dandy. They showed up in Philadelphia starting in May of 1787 and they wrote this great document. But it was hard-pressed, hard work, and they got it done. And when Franklin left, a woman asked him as he left, she said, Mr. Franklin, what have you given us? And he said, “A republic if you can keep it.”

I yield back.

Mrs. LUMMIS. I thank the gentleman from Ohio for joining me this evening.

I look forward to hearing the remarks of the next group. They are our Democratic colleagues from across the aisle. This group will be led by Representative WASSERMAN SCHULTZ, who I had the privilege of visiting Israel with earlier this year. She led a congressional delegation to Israel. And for this neophyte in international policy, it was a fabulous experience. We had the opportunity to meet Israeli President Shimon Peres. We visited with Benjamin Netanyahu, with the minority leader, Tzipi Livni, and also with Palestinian Authority leaders. We visited Jerusalem, the Golan Heights, and some of the fabulous farming communities near the Sea of Galilee.

For someone who had never visited Israel—in fact, I had never seen the Mediterranean Sea in my entire life, and to get to visit it with people who are steeped in the history, the politics, and the worldwide consequences of our relationship with Israel, it was a tremendous experience. So I want to thank the gentlewoman from Florida, Representative WASSERMAN SCHULTZ, for including me on the congressional delegation that she led to Israel.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

THE ECONOMY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. Mr. Speaker, first, before she departs the Chamber, let me just say what an absolute pleasure it was to travel to the Middle East with the gentlelady from Wyoming. Mrs. LUMMIS was a pleasure to have as a companion. She was inquisitive. The purpose of that trip was particularly to bring Members who had not been to Israel before so that we could learn about the importance, not just strategically, the importance of Israel in terms of its relative location to its neighbors so that Members like Mrs. LUMMIS could see and understand just how important it is that we continue to be supportive of Israel as a Jewish and democratic state.

Everyone I know that travels to Israel comes back a stronger supporter and a stronger pro-Israel advocate; and I commend you, Mrs. LUMMIS, for doing just that. It was an absolute pleasure. We began a friendship that I know will continue many years into the future, so thank you very much.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I am thrilled to be joined by my colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. TONKO), this evening. We're going to spend some time talking about our economy and talking about the evolution of our economy. There certainly has been some ebb and flow in that regard, but we are here tonight to talk about the success that we have had in turning the economy around and beginning to see progress. Inch by inch, month after month, there is more and more progress as we move forward.

This evening I want to highlight, Mr. TONKO, the fact that if you look back—and I know we have a chart on this which I would love to go get in a minute—but if you look back to just before President Obama took office in January, at that point, for the months leading up to his inauguration, we were bleeding, the United States was bleeding 700,000-plus jobs a month, and we weren't able to stanch those losses. The Bush administration handed President Obama the largest deficit in history, and one which they created after being handed a significant surplus from President Clinton.

And to have to deal with the amount of problems that our economy was facing when President Obama was inaugurated was astonishing and appalling, Mr. TONKO, because to have been left a mess and to have the economy driven off a cliff as it was was just absolutely irresponsible and it was avoidable.

It was avoidable because during the Bush administration, instead of focusing exclusively on the wealthy and having a tax-cutting policy that was focused exclusively and irresponsibly on the wealthiest 1 percent of Americans, instead what should have been done is there should have been a focus like there has been every single month since President Obama took office; there should have been a focus on broadening that tax-cutting policy and focusing on targeting tax cuts for the middle class. That wasn't done, and so the economy essentially was careening out of control.

Now you fast forward to a year and a half after he first took office, you fast forward to a little more than a year after we passed the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act, which invested $787 billion into our economy to jumpstart the economy, to create jobs, to provide 98 percent of taxpayers in this country a tax cut. Where you had the wealthiest 1 percent get tax cuts under the previous administration, 98 percent of Americans got a tax cut last year. And we actually have the lowest tax rate now that we've ever had. It is just really amazing the way things have been turned around, and we should be very proud of that.

Today, in terms of job creation, from bleeding 700,000-plus jobs, we are now adding an average of 200,000 jobs a month since the beginning of this year. That is a really incredible accomplishment. I'm going to toss it to you in a second and go get those charts so we can have an illustration of what we're talking about, but we have a lot to be proud of. We have a long way to go. I mean, granted, we certainly aren't out of the woods yet, but we have turned things around and are beginning to see that in the economic indicators that I know we will talk about tonight. So it is a pleasure to be with you this evening.

Mr. TONKO. Thank you, Representative WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. And thank you for bringing us together for this Special Order which obviously will speak to the wisdom of sound policy that breaks from the failed policies of the past.

What is startling is that we should have learned from decades ago that the trickle-down theory simply does not work. It does not work because there wasn't a benefit felt by the working middle class, a large group of people across this country who in many situations live paycheck to paycheck, putting aside money for their mortgage payment, putting aside savings for college for their children, putting aside some reserves for unexpected expenses. That kind of situation must be responded to. And I think the fact that you talk about 98 percent of Americans getting what was now recorded to be historically the largest middle income tax cut in this Nation's history was a big part of the Recovery Act. It is what started to circulate the dollars.

When we look at the economic advice that we got, not only as the House of Representatives, but the United States Senate and the White House, with President Obama and Congress being advised by a team of economists that ranged over the broad spectrum of philosophy in the world of economics, and from the far-right thinking to the far-left thinking, from more conservative viewpoints to the more liberal viewpoints, there were recommendations made by this panel of economists who spoke to the priorities that needed to be embraced by this Nation. The time had more than passed to invest in the recovery for America, and the results are astounding.

When we look at the Recovery Act, we can witness that the bleeding has stopped. The telltale indicators suggest in many cases that there is slow and steady progress, that the bleeding has stopped, and the Recovery Act can be credited for that.

The investments that were made were in three categories: tax cuts, as the representative, the gentlewoman from Florida indicated, a historically large impact, a historic largest middle income tax cut for this Nation. That was shared with the middle income community, the working families of this country.

Next, an effort made for issues like FMAP and education aid that went to States. I know that my home State of New York did extremely well with the Medicaid relief monies, did extremely well with the education investments so that we are able to keep some of the public sector employment situations, from educators to public safety, alive and well, and to allow for those families who were in need of assistance to receive some of the Recovery Act monies. And the unanimity with which the economists spoke in this situation simply was driven by the very forceful thinking that these entitlement situations—the need for food and clothing and shelter in tough times where people were finding themselves without a job through no fault of their own were allowed then to, with dignity, continue forward in these tough times; and they reinvested in the local regional economies. That got the local economies circulating and began the work, the progress of pulling ourselves out of this recession, which was, again, a historic situation as was witnessed by the previous speaker.

And then finally, investments, investments in a way that went to projects that were back-burnered, investments in technology, technology and education, in energy situations, in health care, in all sorts of activities, in transportation and infrastructure, utilizing technology in a way that could take those issues that were displaced, put onto the back burners were now brought forward by the Obama administration and by the leadership of this House with Speaker PELOSI and others leading us in the votes for recovery. And what happened was that, for instance, in the area of energy, we're creating jobs.

Now, the Representative from Florida, Representative WASSERMAN SCHULTZ, told us that we're now seeing hundreds of thousands of jobs this year added to the recovery, 84 percent of which, I would point out, are private sector. So that's the way we want to grow the jobs. But how is it happening? It's happening with investment in technology, investment in smart meters, smart thermostats, smart grids that enable to us have more control over our destiny as energy consumers.

□ 1945

That is not only job growth, private-sector job growth, but it is also investing in a way that allows us to be cutting-edge competitive and to provide for a stronger quality of life and for a more competitive edge for our business community.

We also invest in health care with technology, making certain that duplication and mistakes and inefficiencies in the health care system are avoided, and we can go forward with a stronger outcome—a savings, again, for consumers who would have to pay for this duplication and for these mistakes.

Then there is the investment in education so that students are now able to have a stretching of the education resources in the classroom and where they can have a first-class opportunity to think outside their neighborhoods in which they live, where they can be more worldly in the classroom, through technology, in order to witness some of the great things that are happening out there.

This is a great opportunity for us to, this evening, talk about the differences, to contrast the differences out there—the failed policies of the past, Representative WASSERMAN SCHULTZ, that brought about 8 million jobs lost in a recession. That outdoes the Great Depression. Many of my constituents out there will tell me that they recall the Great Depression, and 8 million jobs surpass that situation.

So we started out in a very difficult situation, and I know that, with the Recovery Act, we are beginning to make progress. We are going to continue to stay on this slow and steady course that will enable us to come back from what was a very deep hole.

Representative WASSERMAN SCHULTZ, I know that we are joined now by our friend and colleague from the State of Pennsylvania, Representative KATHY DAHLKEMPER, who, like me, is a member of the freshman class here in this great House of Representatives, who is one of those great additions to the House and who is an enjoyable force with whom to work.

So, Representative DAHLKEMPER, I know that you wanted to jump in and share your thoughts on our recovery here.

Mrs. DAHLKEMPER. Well, thank you. I thank the gentleman from New York, a fellow freshman who has been a good friend of mine since I came to this House.

I also want to thank Congresswoman DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ for bringing us all together tonight. It is a great opportunity to talk about the progress we have made and about the progress that we are continuing to make. We know we are in a recession, that we are digging out of a very, very deep recession, but the signs are positive.

You know, as is Mr. TONKO, I am very much from a manufacturing-based economy, and I look at those manufacturing numbers always with great interest to see exactly where we are going from my district. What I find, actually, to be very encouraging is that our American manufacturing base has grown not just in the last month, not just in the last 3 months, not just in the last 5 months, but for 10 straight months the manufacturing base has grown in this country, and that pretty well correlates with the passing of the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act. We have created more than 125,000 manufacturing jobs over the last 5 months.

Now, I know people back home talk to me about how we can move our country forward. They say we've got to get back to making things, and I completely agree with that. For so many years, our economy has become an economy of paper, and we have been more concerned about what has gone on with Wall Street than what has gone on in the factories throughout our great Nation. As I say, particularly for those of us in the Northeast, we've seen many manufacturing jobs go. So what I find very encouraging is that we are getting back to making things in this country.

With that, we have seen a couple of things. One is consumer confidence, which is another great indicator. It rose in June to the highest level in more than 2 years. That is from the University of Michigan, a consumer confidence survey. That's not from us here in the House. That comes from an outside source, which was just on the 11th of this month, just a few days ago. Consumer confidence is rising for the third straight month and to its highest level in more than 2 years. This was way before Mr. TONKO and I were in Congress, so that is very, very encouraging news, along with retail sales rising for the seventh straight increase and the 12th gain in 13 months. So there are a lot of very encouraging signs.

Now, I know this is still a problem for those who are out of jobs, and obviously we are still very, very concerned about that, but we have some signs that this economy is recovering. It really has had to do with what we have done here in the House, with so many of the good policies that we have passed here which have helped move this economy forward.

Here we will show you retail sales, which are on the rebound. When people start buying again, they have confidence, confidence that we are recovering. So here is what happened in the red during the Bush administration:

As you can see, we were going along pretty well until the recession began, which was going into 2008. Then, of course, it takes a very big dip right before I and Mr. TONKO took office. That was in November–December of 2008. Then you can see what happened after we passed the Recovery Act back here in March of 2009, and the numbers continued to steadily go up. Here we are in April of 2010, and we are getting almost back up to where we were, well, about 4 years ago, actually. So great news in terms of the retail sales on the rebound. Great news on consumer confidence going up. Great news on the manufacturing.

Of course, we want even better news. We want to continue to work on this economy and to help businesses create jobs. We are providing, as Mr. TONKO said, so many of the, I think, road maps that need to be there to create those new jobs. Whether we're talking clean energy, whether we're talking broadband, whether we're talking health care, you know, we need to move into this new century. We're doing that, and we did many of those investments through the American and Recovery Act, and I always like to talk about the recovery and reinvestment side. The reinvestment is what we don't talk enough about, and I know Mr. TONKO loves to talk about that, too. We are talking about where we are today, and so these are just some of the numbers that, I think, need to be brought out, and the American people are feeling that confidence level going up.

I now yield back to the gentlelady from Florida.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. Thank you very much.

First of all, let me just say that it has been such a breath of fresh air. I know Speaker PELOSI likes to say that each new Congress breathes in new life from the trenches, new people who have just come from having their fingers on the pulses of their communities. Both of you, Mrs. DAHLKEMPER and Mr. TONKO, reflect that statement really to a T. I know that you're in your districts, constantly working hard to make sure you can come up here and can fight for the things that the people in your districts care about.

Particularly, I know I never tire of hearing you talk over and over about how important it is that we restore that manufacturing base and that we be supportive of an economy that makes sure that we can make things again. I have heard that refrain from you and from your industrial, you know, rust belt colleagues for many months now, and now we are seeing the fruits of that effort with the increase in manufacturing.

Also, it is really exciting that you can actually point back, Mr. TONKO, to a point in time and to a policy decision that we made, to a vote that we cast, which made a difference. I mean it's hard, you know, to gauge sometimes whether or not what we are doing is working, you know, whether a policy decision has had the desired outcome, but you can see. I mean the proof is in the pudding. I mean here are retail sales that Mrs. DAHLKEMPER just talked about. Now let's just look at consumer confidence in general, because the consumer confidence numbers did just come out, as you talked about.

Every month for, I think, the last 7 months, we have had consumer confidence on the rise. We have had another jump in consumer confidence. This is a chart that talks about the increase in household wealth and how American household wealth is beginning to recover. $17.5 trillion of household wealth was wiped out under President Bush. Under President Obama, we have already recovered $5 trillion of that household wealth.

When people have their wealth restored, when they have resources again, they start spending money. That's why those retail sale numbers are going up. When you have your wealth restored, you gain more confidence in your ability to make some spending decisions that you might not have made. So, ultimately, we are going in the right direction.

Really, I have to laugh at some of our friends on the other side of the aisle. You know, with the expression "your glass is half full or your glass is half empty," that's sort of the determining factor of whether someone is an optimist or a pessimist. I don't even think it's half. I think their glass is just empty. I think they broke the glass, because, to be honest with you, it's really shocking how they can see only gloom and doom with positive economic numbers like this. I mean what is so sad is sometimes I think they wish that this were not the direction that our economy was moving in because, sadly, for so many of our colleagues on the other side of the aisle, it's about regaining power rather than about seeing the American people regain some power, some power in the purse. So I just thought I would point that out.

Before I flip it to you, Mr. TONKO, some really exciting and interesting poll numbers came out this week. In these hours, we like to make sure that we don't just have people taking it from us. I mean, you know, obviously, I'm a Democrat. I'm, you know, supportive of my party's agenda, of our leadership's agenda and of moving the country in a new direction, so we try to talk about third party validators on the House floor.

The ABC News/Washington Post poll was released just this past week, and it showed that Democrats are favored over Republicans to handle the Nation's biggest problems. Six in 10 who were polled are dissatisfied with congressional Republicans' ideas. In terms of the individuals polled, we were supported by a 12-point margin. By a 12-point margin, Americans trust Democrats over Republicans to handle our Nation's biggest problems 44 to 32 percent. That is a pretty significant indicator that Americans are happy with the direction that we are going.

I think no matter what district you go to, whether it's to a progressive district like mine or to a moderate district like Mrs. DAHLKEMPER's—and you're probably halfway in between Mrs. DAHLKEMPER's and mine, Mr. TONKO, as far as the philosophical spectrum in your district—our constituents would tell us we are cautiously optimistic, that things are moving in the right direction but that we're not out of the woods yet. You need to keep pushing. You need to keep innovating. You need to keep passing legislation that is going to jump-start and spark this economy and be an engine of job creation. That's what we're keeping our nose to the grindstone on.

Mrs. DAHLKEMPER. Will the gentlelady yield?

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. I'd be happy to yield.

Mrs. DAHLKEMPER. You talked about other people weighing in with some of these surveys, and I just wanted to mention a few things that have been in the news just in the last week.

We have Melanie Holmes, the vice president of Manpower, Incorporated, who knows a lot about whether people are working or not. A very interesting thing about this result is that the positive trend is very broad-based. That was out of CNNMoney, again, just a few days ago.

Mark Zandi, the chief economist for Moody's, just a few days ago, said that nearly two-thirds of metro areas are flashing signs of growth. He said a tracking tool that is forecasting firms is showing this upturn, and it is the best showing since mid-2008.

Then we have from CNNMoney.com the title of "Bosses More Bullish on Hiring." For the third straight quarter, more U.S. employers said that they will add jobs instead of cut them, according to a survey released Tuesday. The survey found that 18 percent of employers intend to increase staff, up from 16 percent the previous quarter.

These are people who are not associated with us here in the House of Representatives. These are independent groups out there, media outlets, who are seeing what we're seeing in these numbers here, and they're telling the American people the true story of what is going on in the economy.

I yield back.

Mr. TONKO. If the gentlewomen will yield, it's interesting. You know, you talk about these observations that have been shared in publications, but as early as April 16, I believe, Fortune Magazine talked about the Recovery Act's working, that the President's policies were having their presence felt. They talked about it as a sharp turn.

Interestingly, if we see the pattern of the retail sales that you presented in chart format, the household wealth recovery chart and this GDP scaling, they all had that same graphic. It's this sharp V formation, that precipitous dive, straight-line dive, from early 2008 into the beginning of 2009. Here is another one on the path to economic recovery and then that slow and steady straight line of recovery.

So, to me, it's blatantly obvious there was this continuation of decline, and you can't help but wonder what would have happened if we had allowed the failed policies of the past to continue or if this President and if this Congress had not stepped up to the plate.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TONKO. Absolutely.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. Since you asked the question rhetorically, I'll actually jump in and answer it with an answer from Mark Zandi, Moody's economist who Mrs. DAHLKEMPER just referred to.

As to what would have happened without the Recovery Act, without the TARP legislation, and without making sure that we grabbed a hold of the tiller of this economy, what he says would have happened is we absolutely would have sunk into a depression, that literally the policies of President Obama and of the Democratic leadership in the House and the Senate steered our ship of fate away from a depression.

Mr. TONKO. So we can see these V formations; that downward straight line impact that could have kept going, but we changed directions. And now, we're told by our colleagues in the House on the other side, it's not quick enough. We've made a wonderful recovery here. We have stopped the bleeding, and we're climbing upward. The analogy used by the President, where they drove the car into the ditch, and then it took a tough bit of effort to pull that car out of the ditch, and they're saying, Give us back the keys.

Well, I think the public is now understanding that very failed policies were governing our economy. It brought America to her knees. And we saw the lack of regulation with big business, big banks, Wall Street, credit card companies, big oil. Gosh, we see what is happening in the Gulf. All sorts of big special interests that had a heyday. No regulation. No watchdog in the equation. Let us run free. Let us be in a situation of laissez-faire. Government is bad. No restriction. Let it just run free.

Well, capitalism works, but you also need guidance. You need some sort of measurement, some sort of discipline that errs on the side of the consumer, the taxpayer, whomever, the small business. And the recovery here is about smart policy. It's about progressive policy. It's about taking what was broken and fixing it.

And, you know, don't stand on the sidelines and say, We're watching you mop; you're not mopping quick enough.

No. Pick up a mop and help us clean up what has been messed up here.

I think the public now is understanding. They're seeing this big oil company that got us into trouble now, is harming the environment, is impacting the economy of the Gulf States. They're understanding now that regulation for certain big groups out there is essential. Regulation for Wall Street was essential. Our work, to make certain that we help the small business community by assisting them with loan opportunities, working with community banks to open up the credit lines; the backbone of our economy, the springboard to our recovery is through small business.

And this was an era that preceded us that was about special interest, big companies, big industries getting all sorts of favorable review and treatment while small business and middle-income America struggled. Struggled to live paycheck to paycheck while greed—greed—predominated on the scene and really brought this economy to its knees and caused undue hardship, unnecessary hardship to folks, ranging from those in their senior years, who had retirement accounts destroyed.

And what do our folks say here on the other side? Privatize Medicare. Privatize the situation for Social Security.

This is a choice here. It's a contrast. It's a difference. Big oil companies, big banks, Wall Street, special interests, give them free rein; or assist the small business community, work for incentives and relief, tax relief for middle-income Americans. There's a contrast here. And it's that V formation. Just as that line went precipitously south, we're now going north. So is the contrast. Sharp and clear. And I think, more and more, the general public is saying, No, you don't get back the keys. You don't deserve to get back the keys to the car.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. You're absolutely right. And I want to jump off what you just talked about, related to the choice that Americans will have. Over the next few months, we are going to get closer and closer to an election, and in November, I think Americans will have a very clear choice. They can go back to the failed policies of the past. They can backslide toward the Bush era, in which we will be in a situation where we will be led by people who think that we should exclusively focus on big business, big corporations, the wealthiest Americans, and that tax-cutting policies should only be targeted towards that group of people and use the whole trickle-down notion that has been proven time and again not to be effective, in fact, proven to be detrimental to the economy.

Or we can continue to move in the direction that the Obama administration and Democratic leaders in the House and Senate have been taking us, which is slow and steady progress so that we can reestablish the balance that we need in our economy, particularly, as you mentioned, the balance in terms of regulation. We allowed the fox to guard the henhouse for 8 long years in industry, particularly in the financial services area, which we're debating and discussing this week. And it's high time that we reestablish some order and balance.

Mr. TONKO. Well, I don't get to watch TV too much. All of us know we're out in the districts working all the time. But I do understand the concept of a show called, "Are You Smarter than a Fifth-Grader?" So we will put it out to the fifth-graders and say, Would you prefer 8 million jobs lost, or would you prefer over a half million, over perhaps three-quarters of a million jobs returned, 84 percent in the private sector category? I think the fifth-grader would say, Give me the job growth, not the job loss. And you go down that list, and I think the fifth-grader is going to tell us that this is pretty clear. It's a contrast that I understand. And it's important. I think it's about choices.

Is it fast enough? We would all love instant response. We would love millions of jobs in one quarter. But after we witnessed $18.5 trillion lost to household incomes over an 18-month span during the Bush recession—that's about a trillion dollars per month lost to household income—to now recover $6 trillion, a 30 percent recovery of that loss, is a move in the right direction. Again, a fifth-grader would say, I'd rather take a $6 trillion gain than an $18.5 trillion loss for households.

So it becomes more and more apparent that the Recovery Act isn't working; that it's about small business incentives, tax relief for small businesses investing in basic research, research and development, embracing science and technology, building a clean energy economy, growing an innovation economy, supporting emerging technologies. These are all dynamics of strength. And the confluence of these dynamics of strength mean a growing economy and one that can base itself on cutting edge in design and format. I think it's a strong comeback, and we need to maintain the course of recovery.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. Mr. TONKO, as the parent of twin fifth-graders, I can tell you that my fifth-graders often scratch their heads and wonder, Mom, what the heck are your colleagues on the other side of the aisle doing? They wonder why they only focus on the most narrow view.

Mr. TONKO. I, by the way, had lunch with one of those.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. Yes, you did. You did, as a matter of fact. And my fifth-graders and first-grader will be back tomorrow. I'm looking forward to that. Maybe we can send them over to the other side of the Chamber, and they can shake things up a little bit.

With that, we've been joined by our colleague from Ohio (Mr. BOCCIERI) who is doing a fantastic job representing his community and is a real fighter for the values of the Midwest.

Mr. BOCCIERI. Well, thank you, Congresswoman DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ of Florida and PAUL TONKO, for setting up the challenge of setting the record straight.

Just as an aside, a few years ago, as a State legislator, I remember sitting in my room watching C-SPAN, and you and Congressman RYAN were speaking a few years ago. And I thought, Wow, how neat would it be to stand next to them and talk about the same things we're talking about today.

Well, here we are. So it's an honor to share this stage with you to talk about how we get our country back on track and we get our economy moving again.

I agree with so much that has been said here tonight; that America has to be the producers of wealth, not just the movers of wealth. We have to build things here in this country. We have to invest in our workforce. We have to invest in things that are going to make us different than the rest of the world. And we have that here.

You look at the computer. You look at our space program. You look at things that have been invented here. Things don't happen by accident in America. Things happen because we have some of the greatest entrepreneurs. We have the great entrepreneurial spirit, we have great mind, great thinkers. We also have a great form of government that works on behalf of the American people.

However, what we hear from the other side, Mr. Speaker, what we hear from our colleagues on the Republican side, is that "no" has been the standard answer here for the last year and a half. The party of "no." The "just say no" crowd. Say, No ideas. No solutions. No interest in helping America move back and move to higher places.

Look, we're elected to do things, not just to win elections but to do things and put the country back on track. When you run for office, you make all these promises. But when you govern, it's about choices. And we have to a choice to make. Do we work together as Democrats and Republicans to put America first, to put America back on track, and to put our country moving forward? Or do we participate in this partisan exercise here where all we get is stiff arms?

We have worked very hard to try to bring our colleagues on the other side, Mr. Speaker, to the middle and to govern from the middle and to work hard to make sure that we incorporate some of their ideas. In fact, in the health care debate, there were over 150 Republican amendments. The final version of the bill reflected the version that was introduced in 1993 by Senator Bob Dole. So while it had a lot of Republican ideas, it had zero Republican votes.

And that is not leadership, Mr. Speaker. Because leadership is about action, not just position. Not just position.

And what we hear is this constant drumbeat about how they want the keys back, as you said, Congressman TONKO. They want the keys back.

Well, the American people remember that they drove us into this ditch by bending over to Big Oil, by bending over for credit card companies and big Wall Street banks and the big insurance companies.

Our political philosophy is this—I know all of us share this—that the government should set the out-of-bounds markers. They should set the goal posts, and let the free market operate in between. But be a good referee. When someone goes out of bounds, you throw the flag. When big oil companies don't have redundancy built into their systems, the referee should be throwing the flag. When private insurance companies are dumping people because they paid their insurance but committed the sin of getting sick, we should throw the flag. Now we could have a debate all day about where those markers and where those out-of-bounds markers are set and where those goal posts are set. But make no question, the government should be the referee.

Mr. TONKO. If the gentleman from Ohio would yield.

Mr. BOCCIERI, you struck something in me when you talked about the party of "no." Even the party of "no," it was not good enough to say "no" to an issue like America COMPETES. On this very floor, we had the opportunity to create millions of jobs through an investment in manufacturing; an investment in STEM, science, technology, engineering and math, for our students out there to train the workforce of the future; to invest in basic research; R&D; to do all sorts of incentives for business. Not only was it not enough to say "no," because we had the votes with the "no" votes from the other side. We still had many more votes favorable. But then it was a game of politics to just drop the progress, kill the progress of America COMPETES to the point where the issue had to be resolved through all sorts of negotiations over a couple of weeks. So it held back progress.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. Would the gentleman yield on that example?

Because let's tell them how they slowed that process down. It's not only that they were not voting for the America COMPETES Act, which by any measure will create literally millions, potentially, of new jobs and definitely tens of thousands of jobs. They added an unrelated, irrelevant pornography amendment to that legislation to try to catch Members on our side of the aisle in a vote for or against pornography. And what they did was they ran an amendment that said that we would vote on whether or not Federal employees would be able to be paid if they viewed pornography on work hours.

Mr. TONKO. It was an intentional game of "gotcha." Here sat in the balcony representatives of labor and representatives from the United States Chamber of Commerce, a broad spectrum of support for a bill that takes America to the cutting edge, allows her to invest in smart manufacturing, and to compete effectively in a global marketplace, to invest in science and technology, to make certain that we're state-of-the-art, that we're investing in research and development, which translates into jobs. All of that activity thwarted by a game of politics on this floor.

It didn't matter—it didn't matter—that nearly 2 million jobs could be created; that we could become a more competitive Nation. That didn't matter. And "no" wasn't enough of a force to stop it. So we resort to political games. That's the sort of record that the public will scrutinize, and they will say, Look, we see the slow and steady progress. We believe in this.

To your point, Representative BOCCIERI, about setting up the goalposts, setting up the parameters for this program, yes, allowing the capitalist model to work but making certain that there's discipline, discipline in the situation and the scenario, so that we go forward and invest and know that we recover with lucrative dividends.

Mr. BOCCIERI. Well, what do we invest in, Congressman TONKO? We invest in our greatest asset in America, and that's our people. We want to invest in our people, workforce retraining, investing in jobs in our economy, putting people back to work.

Putting the private interests of our citizens over public interests is what we see, Mr. Speaker, from the other side. They want to put private interests ahead of our good public interest.

We've seen the unregulated greed. We've seen what happens when things go unchecked on Wall Street. What we've seen when we've taken office just in the 111th Congress, I mean you and I are both freshmen, and we were handed a $3.5 trillion deficit. The record is very clear.

Look at this chart here, Congressman TONKO and Congresswoman WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. I mean, the last three Republican Presidents have given us tremendous debt to our Nation. And what we have heard, Mr. Speaker, from the previous speakers on the other side just a short time ago was how the government is out of control and we're spending. Well, look, it was Republican Presidents who were doing the spending.

The last surplus that America had was a $5.6 trillion surplus handed over to us by President Clinton. So, you know, for them to come over here and lecture Democrats about spending is pretty ironic, considering the facts here that this chart shows.

Now look, we have got to get our spending under control in Washington. Democrats and Republicans both agree on that point. We've got to make sure that we can pay for the wars that we're paying for, these two undeclared wars that we find ourselves in. We need to make sure that we live within our means like working people have to. But let's be clear, a $3.5 trillion deficit handed to us day one when Congressman TONKO and Congressman BOCCIERI walked through the doors is almost insurmountable in an economy that was on such downward spirals, as you had talked about.

So let's get this straight. This is the deficit that was handed over to us with a trillion-dollar tax cut to the wealthiest Americans, another trillion-dollar tax cut to the top 1 percent of our country, a prescription drug plan that left a huge doughnut hole for our seniors that was $500 billion, and two undeclared, unfunded wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. Those are the facts.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. And add to that, on top of that, the Republicans allowing the PAYGO statute and the PAYGO rules to expire. A big part of the reason—under the budget that was passed by President Clinton, we adopted under a Democratic administration, Democratic leadership a pay-as-you-go rule that said that we're not going to spend more than we take in. I mean, just like people have to do in their own households. And when we came back into the majority, we re-adopted those rules. And now we have the PAYGO statutes reestablished. And what we need to make sure we continue to do—except for emergency spending, which in an economy that's as dire as this one, we've had a number of different emergency situations.

But making sure that other than emergency situations, we pay for the legislation that we're passing, whether it's including the war costs in the budget and actually having it be real numbers instead of pretending that we don't have an ongoing obligation when it comes to war funding. We included the costs of the Iraq war in the Appropriations Act, in the budget, unlike the Republicans who just pretended year to year that we weren't going to actually have that expense.

So we have been trying to be responsible. We have been trying to make sure that we can get things back on track, and that, like you said, we can establish some parameters. Unfortunately, our colleagues on the other side of the aisle think that government is always an obstacle; government can never be a solution. I don't think government is the be all and end all solution to all of our world's problems either. But government certainly can be part of the solution. Governments can help make sure that we can establish some fairness and some balance and also make sure that there is someone minding the store, that there is not an unchecked industry. We have about 60,000 barrels a day gushing out of the ocean floor right now because no one was paying attention.

Mr. TONKO. I think mismanagement and bad government are totally unacceptable.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. Absolutely.

Mr. TONKO. But effective government, sound government where you're investing in a way that will grow back the economy, where you're creating the discipline that was so essential. Just looking at the gulf today, understanding that all of this heartache could have been avoided had there been some sort of discipline where you weren't taking shortcuts to perhaps grow that profit column, where you weren't—as the 97 percent report required, you weren't investing in technology.

And so all across the board we see these situations where it was just, like, run on your own. Don't let anybody control you or discipline you. We will be there. We'll be your friend. You are a big special interest. Now it's like bringing it back, reining it in, and saying, My gosh, look at that $11.5 trillion deficit. That red bar goes so deep on that chart. When we look at that chart, it's so obvious to the naked eye that something had to be done differently. You couldn't continue the failed policies of the past. We would have been in such a deep hole. Again, it was tough pulling that car out of the ditch, but we got it out of that ditch, and I think the contrast now is, Do you give back the keys to the people who drove the car in the ditch? Or do you allow them to go forward and continue the progress? I think that it's a very stark contrast.

Mr. BOCCIERI. Instead of giving the keys back, we should revoke the license, quite frankly, because these numbers are stark. And I have children who are going to have to pay for this. You have children who are going to have to pay for this. Let's revisit this, a $1.4 trillion deficit under President Reagan, a $3.3 trillion deficit under President H.W. Bush, a $5.6 trillion surplus under President Clinton, an $11.5 trillion deficit under George W. Bush.

I mean, the numbers are stark, and every answer or every solution that they tried to come up with is about giving more tax breaks to the wealthiest Americans and taking the stripes off the referee. This is not the answer. We need to come together as a country to address this. But certainly the facts are presented here, and that is why it is so important that we have got to invest in the greatest asset in our country, and that's our people. And you know, by doing that with the Recovery Act, investing in workforce investment, retraining workers—because some of these trade deals have been good for the Ports of Galveston and California and the Port of New York, but they haven't been good for the Midwest. Congresswoman WASSERMAN SCHULTZ and I understand that by reinvesting in our workforce, helping those workers transition from manufacturing jobs that have left is very important to me.

And while I'm encouraged that we've seen now 10 consecutive months of manufacturing increase in our country, we have got to be the producers of wealth in this Nation, not just the movers of wealth.

I'm happy to report that small businesses in my community are beginning to grow again. The NuEarth Corporation in Alliance, they have just created 60 new jobs in our small town. Medline Industries, a manufacturer and distributor of medical products, has just created dozens of jobs and will be adding jobs over the next 3 years, they have announced. Nationwide Insurance just announced another 600 new jobs in Ohio. They have a facility in my district, an office building in my district. One of the best news reports that we have heard was that Rolls-Royce, who has invested in fuel cell technology, an alternative energy source that even our military is beginning to use, just announced that they're moving their research headquarters from Singapore to Stark County, Ohio, in the 16th Congressional District. They're going to invest $3 million in equipment and are creating up to 60 new jobs and are retaining 32 that are there already. And it goes on and on.

The statistics are showing that we are improving this economy. We're growing—certainly not fast enough for the million of jobs that have been lost under the previous administration and what we were handed day one when we walked in the office, but we are doing our best to turn this economy around and invest in our people.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. And we're doing it without our friends on the other side of the aisle, which is really just so incredibly disappointing. I mean, I have seen our leadership reach across the aisle time and again and ask our Republican colleagues to come to the table, sit down. We're not going to agree on everything, but let's sit down and try to hammer out areas of agreement where we can find some common ground. Let's try to pass bipartisan legislation. As you said, we passed health care reform with over 150 amendments that were offered by Republicans, accepted and included into the bill. We had a bipartisan bill without a bipartisan outcome, and that's been their choice repeatedly. They have made a choice, whether to either sit with us and try to work something out—and you know there's times where you have to—look, politics can be a contact sport.

This is a situation where they have different ideas than we do, but I've been in office for 18 years. I spent 12 years in my legislative body. You were in your legislature as well. I have never been in a situation—and I come from a State that is controlled by Republicans for the majority of the time that I have served in office. But I was always able to reach across the aisle and find some common ground. And we were always able to, on many things, pass bipartisan legislation. They have no interest in that.

So the choices that they are making are, I think, going to result in the American people being presented with a choice to either embrace hyperpartisanship, embrace individuals who are bent on power and bent on controlling the direction that this country moves, and only doing it their way, or Members like our Members who have their fingers on the pulse of their communities, who understand intuitively what the needs are in their district, and who aren't reflexively just voting with their party.

I mean, just look at the diversity of our caucus. We have been able to pass some significant legislation: the Recovery Act, the health care reform legislation. We've passed the Credit Cardholders' Bill of Rights. We have some significant pro-consumer economic recovery legislation, and we haven't passed it unanimously out of our caucus. We have a diversity of ideas, but our ideas and our diversity reflect America because some Members are able to be supportive and some Members aren't.

You would think that there would have to be some people on the other side of the aisle that would have the nerve, that would have the backbone to step up and say, You know, I'm going to put aside my quest for power, and I'm going to sit down, and I know we can work something out. And each of us has had private conversations with other colleagues on the other side of the aisle, and they whisper, Debbie, I really wish we could be with you on this. I really agree with you, but you know, my hands are tied. Really? Your hands are tied? I don't see any rope actually binding your hands or a gag binding your mouth. It's sad.

Mr. BOCCIERI. Well, leadership is about action, not just political position, as I have said before. And we can win elections by taking comfortable votes and maneuver, but that's not real leadership. We come here to get things done. The American people want leadership. They want us to do things. They don't want us to just have a career. They want us to invest in the country. They want us to serve. They want us to do the right thing, do what we think is right, and move the country forward.

You know, I think that at least our Democratic majority has attempted to reach across the aisle and pull people in and say, Give us some ideas. I have sponsored legislation with Members. CHRIS LEE from New York and I have sponsored an investment tax credit so that we can keep our research and development here in America instead of outsourcing it and giving folks an extra bonus if they manufacture their products in America. This is the type of leadership we're asking for. The HIRE Act that I reached across the aisle and worked on with Congressman ROONEY from Florida, this just became a law.

So we have good ideas, and we can share them together; but on the big issues that confound our Nation, we need their leadership as well as ours. A stiff arm is not the solution to any of these big problems our Nation is facing. So the question becomes, Are we going to invest in America? Are we going to invest in the working middle class and champion the values of the middle class here in legislation that we pass? You know, in just simple votes that we have taken for people who have lost their jobs under no fault of their own, to give them an unemployment check, to make sure that they have COBRA insurance so that they can keep their family going to the dentist or the doctor, keep bread on their table. I mean, these are simple things. Investing in the future of our kids, like the COMPETES Act.

I mean, I just don't understand. I share the collective value with you and others, and I know that there are some of my Republican colleagues over there who want to invest in small families and strong communities, but their hands are tied because of partisan politics. And the American people are watching, and I think the poll numbers that you read earlier are very true.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. That is the choice they are making.

Mr. BOCCIERI. The choice that they are making is not to lead. So I think that when it comes to the matter of the economy, we are trying to put our country back on track, and I think we have passed some very good measures here. So setting the fair rules of the road, making sure that we understand that we are going to invest and expand our economy, grow our economy by manufacturing, and becoming the producers of wealth is very important.

You know, nearly 87 percent of the world's economic growth over the next 5 years is going to take place out of the United States. We have a tremendous opportunity with Ohio to export our goods, to invest in our workforce and our manufacturing sector to export some of not just our jobs, but export our goods. We don't want to see any more jobs exported out of this country. And that's what we've seen with some of these trade deals that have been championed by previous administrations.

But certainly when we invest in our economy, and we invest in a big opportunity for us like energy, when you build a new nuclear reactor, you can't outsource it. When you build a new solar array, you can't outsource those jobs. When you build a wind turbine that has 8,000 manufactured parts, 200 tons of steel, the roller bearings are made of Timken, a manufacturer in my congressional district. Those are real jobs. You can't outsource that wind turbine. So we can invest in our future and help us become energy independent in the long run. And that's what we've done with taking these big steps and investing in energy policy that makes sense.

Now, you will hear from my friends on the other side of the aisle who want to identify our legislation, our national energy policy and our legislation that's going to end our dependence on foreign oil in the Middle East, make our economy more secure in the long run because $1 billion leaves America every day and goes over to the Middle East where we are funding Ahmadinejad and so many others. We're funding both sides of this war just by our consumption habits.

So investing in our workforce, creating jobs that can't be outsourced, ending our dependence on foreign oil, these are traditional values, American values that we should all champion. But what are they talking about? Cap-and-trade. Well, come up with a better free market idea, because it was a Republican idea. JOHN MCCAIN has three times introduced a cap-and-trade bill.

Because in 2007, AEP and Connecticut were in this court battle, and the Supreme Court said that the EPA was allowed to curb pollution under the Clean Air Act. Well, we decided to have a free market approach, one that's proven. Because cap-and-trade's been in existence since the 1990s. It curbed acid rain, reduced sulfuric acid, and drove innovation and creativity in that market. So it's a free market approach, a proven one. So if you have a better idea, let's hear one. But it was your idea. So by championing your idea, now they are demagoguing our energy policy as cap-and-trade.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. And using that free market base for innovation and investment in alternative energy is going to take us right through the 21st century. We are risking, without passing that legislation and making sure that we can spark those significant corporate investments in those technologies, we are risking giving over our leadership in this area to China and India. I mean, because that's what's going to happen. They are certainly not sitting around waiting for us to decide whether or not to pass alternative energy and climate change legislation. They are focused on making sure that they can be leaders in innovation and technology in the area of alternative energy.

We have so many opportunities to create tax incentives and to help create jobs through that legislation. Again, it would be nice if we weren't being stiff-armed.

And, Mr. Speaker, I see you rising and wanted to thank my colleague from Ohio for joining me tonight. Mr. Speaker, we among House Democrats really spend quite a bit of time interacting with our constituents. We do it in many ways. We do it in live town hall meetings, in telephone town hall meetings, as well as through social media networking and interaction. And I know that I really encourage people who are listening to this and encourage our colleagues to reach out to me and provide me with feedback on my Facebook page, which is RepDebbieWassermanSchultz. So anyone interested in giving us some feedback on our Facebook page, that's welcome.

And Mr. BOCCIERI, I don't know if you want to promote your own. We do have a contest going on in the House Democratic Caucus, and so we are all interested in adding folks to our Facebook and Twitter accounts.

Mr. BOCCIERI. Absolutely. And our Web site is Bocchieri.house.gov. That's Bocchieri.house.gov. Please join our Facebook there and leave us your comments as well.

I enjoyed this conversation and dialogue we had. Let's work together to put America back on track. We can do this. America has played second place to no one. And we can invest in our future, invest in our greatest asset, our workforce, and we can do it together.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. That's exactly right. We look forward to repeatedly inviting our colleagues on the other side of the aisle to join us in moving this country in a new direction, continuing to jump-start the economy, create jobs, and aggressively restoring the prosperity that Americans have enjoyed for our entire history.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

NATIONALIZING THE ECONOMY

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAFFEI). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 2009, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. KING) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the privilege of being recognized to address you here on the floor of the House, and I have only a short privilege to look at some of the data that's been presented by my colleagues on the other side of the aisle in the previous hour.

I did look at the poster that says here's the economy as we know it in a very short snapshot in billions of chain GDP dollars. I don't know what chain dollars is. I have never discussed an economy within chain dollars. But I have also not discussed it within trends that are compressed down within the very few quarters that are presented in this graph that's been presented here before us on the floor of the House tonight, Mr. Speaker.

Here is what I would present. Let's just back up a little bit. Let's back up all the way to October of 1929 and think about what's really happened. This Nation has been challenged over and over again to come forward and determine where we are with our economy.

What kind of an economy are we? Are we the managed economy proposed by the Democrats on the other side of the aisle that believe that the President of the United States, the Cabinet, and the Pelosi Congress and the Harry Reid Senate should be the ones to make these economic decisions to manage the nationalized economy? Are we the kind of people that should be nationalizing even more of our economy? And I have gone through this list so many times I can almost recite it by rote in my sleep.

This Federal Government, albeit started under President Bush, with the support of Barack Obama all the way through and most of it picked up by him, has nationalized—and when I say “nationalized,” I mean owned, managed, or controlled—sectors of the economy that have to do with three large investment banks, and that's Citigroup, Bank of America, and Bear Stearns. Those three have been taken over by the Federal Government. AIG nationalized by the Federal Government, the insurance company. Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. The entities that the chairman of the Financial Services Committee, BARNEY FRANK, said he would never support a Federal bailout of Fannie and Freddie. No, he supported the takeover, the Federal takeover of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac.

We have also watched General Motors and Chrysler be taken over by the Federal Government, and a bankruptcy proposal pitched by the administration to the chapter 11 bankruptcy court that dictated the terms of bankruptcy, and among those terms were: Hand over shares of the automakers to the automakers union. And while that was going on, the only bidder before the chapter 11 bankruptcy court with the case of Chrysler, where I actually have the data and probably have it in my hand here, the only bidder was the Federal Government. The structure of it going into chapter 11 was the Federal Government, set up for a bidder. The only bidder was the Federal Government. It was the Federal Government on both sides of that equation. Unprecedented.

A Federal takeover dictating to the bankruptcy court the terms of the resolution of Chrysler and handing over, in the case of General Motors, 17.5 percent of the shares in General Motors over to the automakers union, to the United Auto Workers. That's all taken place, including the takeover of the student loan program in the United States by the Federal Government.

Now, if we add this up, three large investment banks, AIG, Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, General Motors, and Chrysler, according to Professor Boyle of Arizona State University, that's one-third of the private-sector activity of America swallowed up over the ownership, management, or control of the Federal Government.

Then you add to that the student loan program, and then you add to that the financial services that are being regulated right now that are being negotiated in the conference committee that's been named between the House and the Senate, that would put the Federal Government in the position to regulate every single credit transaction in America.

Now, I don't just mean one of the large bailed out, federally owned investment banks is doing business with one of the other large federally owned investment banks, that the Federal Government regulates that. I don't just mean that when a small community bank is doing transactions with people that are coming in to borrow money for operating capital or for a mortgage that the Federal Government regulates that. I will take it right on down to this question that was posed by the dentists. Would their transactions that are set up where they set up monthly payments for the parents to pay for the braces on the teeth of their children be regulated by the Federal Government and by the White House? Answer, yes.

Under this bill that's coming at us under the language we are dealing with, yes, the Federal Government would regulate the transaction, the credit transaction between the dentist and the parents who would want to finance the braces on their children's teeth. Uncle Sam injects himself into that equation.

Do you think that's to the point, Mr. Speaker, where we can't tolerate Federal intrusion any deeper? I think it's gone beyond where we can tolerate Federal intrusion any deeper. But it goes deeper yet. Not just into the cavities into our children's teeth or the braces on them, but right down into a neighborhood, friendly poker game.

And I had them analyze the language for this purpose. I just asked the question: Where does this stop? What are the restraints? What are the constraints on the legislation that would give the Federal Government the authority to regulate every credit transaction in America? And I asked specifically: Will you analyze the language in the bill and tell me could the Federal Government, if they chose to do so, regulate the credit transaction that's embodied in an IOU that could be put in the middle of the pot in a poker game in a neighborhood or a friendly or a family poker game? It might even be an IOU for toothpicks. Yes, the language allows the Federal Government to inject themselves into every credit transaction in America.

So we have the nationalization of one-third of the private-sector activity in the form of three large investment banks taken over by the Federal Government, AIG, the insurance company taken over by the Federal Government, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, and General Motors and Chrysler. That's eight. That's one-third of the private sector activity according to the Arizona State professor, Boyle. One-third. And you add to that student loans, which I don't know what percentage of the overall economy that that is, and I don't want to speculate without some basis of knowledge on that.

But we have got 33 percent of the former private sector activity nationalized, taken over by the Federal Government, by the Obama administration now in control and the management or ownership or control of these private sector entities. And now we are at 33 percent. ObamaCare has passed. That's, by a consensus of accounts, right at 17.5 percent of the overall economy that goes into health care under the ownership, management, or control of the Federal Government; 17.5 percent. Where do you round that to, anybody in sixth grade math? Up to 18. Eighteen percent plus 33 percent is 51 percent of the former private sector activity under the ownership, management, or control of the Federal Government; 51 percent.

And what did Alexander Tytler tell us out of Scotland back as a contemporary of Adam Smith? And in summary terms, when the public understands that they can vote themselves benefits from the public treasury, on that day democracy ceases to exist. That was Alexander Tytler in about the year 1776, a long time back.

Here we are. We are seeing data that shows that only 47 percent of the households don't pay taxes; 47 percent. We don't have a number that shows us the percentage of individuals. But if 47 percent of the households don't pay income tax, and that means Federal income tax, that tells us that we are only 3.0001 percent away from the majority of American households that don't pay income tax. Now, we are within the margin of error.

Who could think that the public hasn't figured out, with the tutelage of President Obama, that they should game the system? Because if you are a marginal employee individual, are you better off to game the system and put yourself on the public dole and tap into a myriad of the 72 different Federal welfare programs that are out there or are you better off to go to work every day?

If we default back to the statement made by Jimmy Carter back in 1976 in Iowa as he campaigned for President of the United States, impressed me—I didn't support him, Mr. Speaker; I want that to be clear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—but he did impress me with a statement that he made. He said the people that work should live better than those that don't. I don't think Jimmy Carter lived by that, but he said that. And that impressed me that it was a simple, clear logic, the logic of clarity that should be delivered in this floor more often than it actually is.

Of course the people that work should live better than those that don't. But Jimmy Carter had a lot of trouble following through on that. But by today's standards, no, he wasn't. He was a piker by today's standards. Anybody that doesn't live up to an average standard of living can go to the public welfare rolls and expect that they are going to have their rent subsidized, their heat subsidized. They are going to have food stamps. They are going to have 69 other Federal programs that they can have access to.

We have become a welfare state. And that works pretty good for the people that want to create a dependency class in America. And that is clearly what's going on with the Obama administration, establishing and expanding the dependency class in America, because they understand that people who are dependent want to make sure that they go vote for the people who require them to be dependent before they will send more benefits their way.

Independent people say, I want less government. I want less taxes. I want a smaller role in our Federal Government. I want the States to have their constitutional right to all the powers that are not enumerated to the Federal Government devolve back to the States or the people, respectively. That's what I want.

Because I know that when people are responsible for their own activities and they are rewarded for positive behavior and the markets and the conditions of a just society provide disincentives for people who are lazy, who are not industrious, who don't take care of their families, who are dishonest, who might be indulging in substance abuse, those negative indicators for a society are punished in a just society, and positive behavior is rewarded in a just society.

You don't have to rule or regulate a just society if you have the financial structures in place, the moral foundation in place and if you're not afraid to stigmatize negative behavior.

But this administration has capped off the effort so far of previous, shall I be nice and call them progressives, their effort, their effort to expand the dependency class in America. And whenever that happens, if this Congress expands the dependency class, it is the equivalent of taking a jackhammer and chiseling away at those beautiful marble pillars of American exceptionalism, chiseling them away, breaking down the very foundation that created American exceptionalism.

We're not a Nation that's created for greatness built upon dependency. The dependency class is anathema to the American people and the American spirit.

Independence is our spirit. Self-reliance is our spirit. Our vigor, our unique vigor is our spirit. Our liberty, our freedom is our spirit. That's who we are.

And how do we get to be in this great Nation? What are these pillars of American exceptionalism that are under assault by the active left in this Congress every single day, jackhammering away at those beautiful marble pillars of American exceptionalism? What are they?

Well, they're easy to find. You look in the Constitution of the United States, take a look into the Bill of Rights. Go right down through the list: freedom of speech, religion, and the press; the freedom of assembly; to petition the government for redress of grievances. Boy, that is beautiful.

Are those marble pillars, Mr. Speaker? Of course, they are.

Freedom of speech, to speak outward and openly of the things that we believe in without restraint or punishment, knowing that the State can't come in and crush us for our opinions, the freedom with a full-throated objection to our government if they're going down a path that we object to or a full-throated support for a President or a Congress or a judiciary branch of government or any of the agencies within the government that's serving our people in a Constitution and a just fashion. That's freedom of speech.

Freedom of religion. Freedom of religion, to worship in the church of our choice or not to worship or worship in our home or under a tree or out in the pasture or while we're in the traffic jam and any way we choose. Freedom of religion. Freedom for a pastor or anyone in the congregation whom he might accept to come up and step behind the podium to preach to the Word and preach the law of God and do so without fear, without fear that the IRS might come in and rule that these words were somehow political or partisan and to take away the 501(c)(3) not-for-profit status that exists for our churches within this country.

The IRS has intimidated pastor after pastor, congregation after congregation. The core of our faith in this country has been eroded because of IRS intimidation of our preaches and our pastors. Even though that speech is guaranteed in the Constitution, it doesn't guarantee that you get a tax deduction if you speak out too openly. So I tell my pastors, preach the Word, preach the law, preach your convictions and your faith to your congregation in a full-throated way, and if the IRS comes in and threatens to take away your 501(c)(3) status, tell them STEVE KING stands with you. I stand with you figuratively. If you need me to stand next to you literally, I will do so, and if you still don't have the courage to preach the Word and stand next to me, then I will come and I will preach the Word.

And if that doesn't give you enough conviction, remember this: Not in the history of this country has any church lost its 501(c)(3) status because a pastor spoke from his faithful religious heart and preached the Word, the gospel of the Lord to the congregation that has gathered together to hear that message. Not once, not ever, not in the history of America has a church lost its 501(c)(3) not-for-profit status because of preaching the Word from the pulpit.

The threat goes out continually, and when a conservative Christian takes a position that has impact, then you hear from the people like, well, let me see—to avoid controversy, let me just say liberal United States Senators who would like to use the IRS to intimidate their opposition. They aren't all alive today, but there's a history of these liberal United States Senators who have done so. None have been successful in removing the 501(c)(3) status. But the truth needs to be preached.

That's just the First Amendment. Freedom of speech, religion, and the press; freedom to peaceably assemble; and petition the government for redress of grievances, first amendment.

Second Amendment, the right to keep and bear arms, the right to own and control our guns and not have the Federal Government take them away or confiscate our guns. Now, I've been a Second Amendment defender for a long time, and I will be for as long as the Lord grants me breath in this life, but Mr. Speaker, many of the people that defend the Second Amendment seem to think that it's about owning and keeping firearms so we can target shoot, recreational shooting, hunt, or for self-defense. And I will take the position here, Mr. Speaker, that those three things that I've talked about, hunting, self-defense, target shooting, are all residual benefits, kind of like extra benefits that come with the Second Amendment.

We would have the Second Amendment whether or not there was target shooting, whether or not there ever was hunting, and whether or not there was self-defense because our Founding Fathers understood that we needed to have an armed populace to defend against tyranny. They understood that a tyrant would come and confiscate our guns and subjugate us to his armed forces, and we would have to knuckle under, and thereby would go our freedom. That was understood by our Founding Fathers, and they put the Second Amendment in so we could defend our freedom and our liberty and be an armed populace to defend against the tyrant.

And the good stuff that comes from that is we get to also hunt, target shoot and defend ourselves. Pretty simple concept. But you look around the world, I don't know of a country or a civilization that has registered firearms that has not confiscated them. When a Nation has confiscated firearms, that suppresses our freedom of speech, that suppresses our freedom of religion, that suppresses our ability to assemble and peaceably petition our government for redress of grievances because we would be intimidated by an all-powerful state. We need a state intimidated by the people.

That's what this country is about. The power in our government comes from God. Our rights come from God. They're vested in the people, and the people confer that authority into their elected Representatives. That is the very definition of a constitutional republic.

And so we have these rights: freedom of speech, religion, and the press; freedom of assembly; and Second Amendment, right to keep and bear arms, because that is a deterrent for tyrants that might want to subjugate us as a people, that might want to take away our God-given rights that we have vested in our elected Representatives. That's just the First and Second Amendment.

Those are all pillars of American exceptionalism. No other country has these kind of rights. They have politically correct laws in places like Canada and Great Britain, and those places are freer than many other places in the world, but we provide a full-throated defense of whatever our particular position happens to be.

We're American. We aren't people that cower. We don't shrink from conflict. We don't shrink from disagreement. I had a lady approach me on the street a couple of months ago, about the time when ObamaCare passed, and she said to me, you have to find a way to get along. It's kind of a Rodney King statement: Can't we all get along? Can't we compromise? Can't we get away from all of this friction and this tension that's going on here over ObamaCare?

And I listened to her. I'd seen the lady on the Hill for several years, actually, and I'd never had a conversation with her. And she impressed me with her deep conviction and commitment to following what was honest, especially in Judiciary Committee. I don't know her name. Only time I ever talked to her.

But I said to her, you know, we have these arguments here, we have this tension, we have this disagreement, and I think we do so because we're called to come to Washington to have these debates, to have these arguments, to have the disagreements so we don't have to come to blows in the streets of America, so we don't have to clash with each other. All the way across from sea to sea, we bring our conflict here. We have these debates here. We test each other in this battle of ideas here, and it's even more effective, and I will say significantly more effective, than it was in the era of the Founding Fathers because we have real-time communications.

Mr. Speaker, we have C-SPAN. We have live radio. We have Internet. We have podcasts. We can have real-time interactive town hall meetings that interact all the way across America. We can carry this message all across this country. This constitutional republic is more effective today from a communications standpoint than it was in the era of our Founding Fathers, and we should be grateful for that. It's our job to use it and utilize it and to continue to build upon this.

So let's have the debate. Let's have a nationwide debate. Let's get after this, and we're doing it, and come November, the American people will decide whether this path of the Federal takeover of first one-third of the former private sector activity of our economy; then adding ObamaCare to this, another 18 percent of our economy going to 51 percent; then, sitting in conference committee right now being deliberated and debated by the conferee, another 15 percent of our economy, the financial sector of our economy, roughly 15 percent by some estimates, you add that onto the 51 percent, and we get up there to 66 percent of our economy; and then we have the cap-and-trade argument, roughly around 8 or 9 percent of our economy.

Now, if cap-and-trade is 8 percent of our economy, then that means, in case anybody wonders, cap-and-trade is about this: It's about capping carbon emissions and trading the carbon credits that you get. So if you are an electrical generating plant and you're burning coal like crazy in 2005, that's the measure, capping at 2005 levels of CO<sub>2</sub> emission, and you're burning all kinds of coal and you're belching this CO<sub>2</sub> out into the atmosphere, which doesn't alarm me, by the way, Mr. Speaker—I still don't think there's a scientific foundation for their hypothesis—but that's going on; the measurement of the emissions of the CO<sub>2</sub> will be capped at 2005.

Now, let's presume that that same electrical generator takes half of his coal consumption down, replaces it with a nuclear generating plant—actually a new plant that will come online in 2017 in South Carolina. It will be the first one in probably 30 years by then. So you get carbon credits for taking the coal generation, the burning of the coal off line, that CO<sub>2</sub> that's not emitted, and replaced it with the nuclear, just the tool that reduced the CO<sub>2</sub> emissions. Now that coal-fired generating operation, which might be an entire utility network, will have half their CO<sub>2</sub> emissions that have been cut now because of the replacement of nuclear become their carbon credits. Carbon credits that, what do they have now? They have something that has value.

They can take their carbon credits, and they can sell them through an exchange on the board in Chicago—there are two exchanges that exist as far as I know right now—and any organization, any entity, any utility that has to burn let's say more coal or more natural gas or more diesel fuel and emit more CO<sub>2</sub> than they did before to supply more demand for electricity would have to buy the carbon credits from the entity that had created them by replacing the CO<sub>2</sub> emissions with say nuclear or wind or solar or some other source. So these exchanges go on.

Carbon credits are expensive when they start, and as they dial this down, the idea is to reduce the CO<sub>2</sub> emissions from the standard, the cap, that's the cap at 2005 emission levels, and trade the carbon credits, dial them down by 17 percent by a certain year, which seems to me is 2013, way too soon. And then from two thousand and whatever that year is, a 17 percent reduction, on out to 2050, reduce the CO<sub>2</sub> emissions by 83 percent.

The vision is, by the time we get to 2050, we'd only be emitting 17 percent of the CO<sub>2</sub> that we're doing today. I'm going to expect we're going to use the same amount of energy, and do you expect, Mr. Speaker, that these carbon credits are going to be worth more or less as the cap gets dialed down year by year, until the year 2050, where 83 percent of the CO<sub>2</sub> emissions are shut down by the economics of this?

Now, it doesn't just shut down the CO<sub>2</sub> emissions and give us the same amount of kilowatt hours, or some other type of energy for that matter, or consumption, that could be diesel fuel or gas or anything. No, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't do that. What it does is it shuts down some of the emissions, but the economics of it require that the cost of power goes up. As the cost of power goes up, the consumption of power goes down. That means we use less energy between now and 2013 or 2017 and 2050.

If we use less energy, why? Do we turn the air conditioner, set it on 80 degrees—reminds me of Jimmy Carter when he said set your thermostat at 60. Remember? Dial the thermostat down to 60, buy a cardigan sweater, button that sweater up and sit in your living room and put a shawl over yourself and sit there and shiver because, after all, we have an American malaise, and we will never be the Nation that we were before, and we will never be the Nation again that we are today. That was Jimmy Carter's message. It also fits pretty close to Barack Obama's message, who, Mr. Speaker, has said that electricity costs would “necessarily skyrocket” under his plan of cap-and-trade.

So what are we doing? We have an administration, and the opportunists in the Senate and the House that are looking at the oil slick over the gulf coast, which is an environmental tragedy, and seeking to capitalize on that environmental tragedy by pushing cap-and-trade legislation which will cripple American industry. For example—and I don't think, Mr. Speaker, that I can give the data on this, but I would just suggest that those that are interested should take a look at the American kiln industry and understand that where we have kilns, it might be a really simple thing, it might be like a dryer where you heat up asphalt and you crank it through a barrel that's got heat in it and it brings it through the other side, kind of like a cement truck cylinder, and comes out the other side hot mix asphalt. It takes a lot of heat to do that, takes a lot of energy; there's a lot of CO<sub>2</sub> emissions.

There are a number of other processes that are far more energy-intensive, including the production of aluminum. We have a lot of aluminum in America, but it takes a lot of energy and emits a lot of CO<sub>2</sub>. This would about take the aluminum industry out of America to look at the cap-and-trade proposals that are out there.

Industry after industry in America would be crippled by cap-and-trade legislation. The cost of our electricity would “necessarily skyrocket,” to quote the President. The cost of our gas would go up, our diesel fuel, our kerosene, our jet fuel; I said our electricity. All energy gets more expensive. It just changes the proportionality of the cost per Btu from energy source to energy source. So we would, as a Nation, then make our energy more costly.

Now, what the cap-and-trade legislation does is it taxes everything that moves. It takes energy to move anything. Just moving my hand back and forth, you can count that in calories how much energy is consumed by that—not a lot, but it's some. If you would take a 200-pound man and run him up the stairs to the top of the dome in the Capitol and back down again—we have people that could calculate how many calories would be consumed by that effort to go up and down—you could turn that into and calculate it back down through Btus of energy. How could you replace that energy with gasoline or electricity with a motor that would take them up and down? This is energy. Anything that moves takes energy. You can't get something done without energy.

So this administration is for taxing everything that moves and a cap-and-trade scheme that would cripple America's economy and put us at a significant disadvantage from the developing countries in the world, in particular India and China—other developing countries, but India and China in particular—it chases our industry over there. And then what would we do? They produce things in countries where they have cheaper energy and cheaper labor. They ship it back to us and we buy it. Well, what do we buy it with? Right now we're buying it with credit, and we are running up the debt against the Chinese. Their holdings of U.S. currency—or U.S. debt, excuse me—are approaching $1 trillion in U.S. debt today.

We lament the cost when a young person finishes their college education, receiving their degree—and there's a number out there, this is not a survey number, it's a general ballpark number that has a consensus to it—roughly a $40,000 debt for a young adult that receives a college degree, $40,000 to move into adulthood to pay off that student loan. Now, whatever that real number is, I'm working with 40, which I think is in the ballpark, and we worry about that student loan being paid off by that young person that has a college degree and is entering into the job market.

I'm not so worried about that $40,000 student loan, Mr. Speaker, because the baby born in America today owes Uncle Sam, the Federal Government, their share of the national debt, $44,000. You can go into the nursery and be there when they bring a new little baby out and put them in the nursery in the hospital. There might be one or two or six or 10 of these new little miracles laying there wrapped up in blue or pink, with their parents proudly looking through the glass or going in to hold their babies. These little babies, every one of them laying in the nursery today, their share of the national debt—not their student loan, which when they get a degree that helps them earn the money to retire that debt, but these little babies' share of the national debt, $44,000. $44,000, Mr. Speaker, for the privilege of being born in the United States of America.

Well, I guess it's probably not the case for an anchor baby that gets citizenship along with it, at least that's an extra bargain that goes along—and I disagree with that. But that same little baby that's born today and owes the Federal Government $44,000, by the time that little baby goes on and learns to tie their shoes and goes off to kindergarten, works their way up through elementary school and walks into their fifth grade class—now, I pick that because that's 10 years, we have 10-year budgets here and we have 10-year budget windows and we calculate our costs over a 10-year period of time.

$44,000 in debt, welcome to America. This is the gift of life for being born in America, and you owe $44,000. A lot of them aren't going to pay their share, so if it's half of them, those other babies are going to owe $88,000. But the share for everyone who walks into fifth grade, according to this President's budget, by the time those $44,000 indebted children start fifth grade, they will owe Uncle Sam $88,000. That's the number, Mr. Speaker.

We should be very worried about a country that can't pass a budget, that for the first time since there have been budget requirements put into the rules here in the Congress itself, since 1974 when this began, this Congress doesn't have the will or the conviction to pass a budget because it is so abysmal, because the overspending is so atrocious, because the spending that they are conducting cannot be defended and they can't defend and vote against the amendments that would surely be attempted to be brought against a budget.

Now, there is a legitimate debate going on in this Congress and there is a legitimate amendment process going on in this Congress, but we don't have a budget and we're not going to have a budget. This Congress doesn't want to take responsibility for a budget.

We're going to see them package up a continuing resolution of some kind, a modified continuing resolution that pays off the political favoritism that they will need in order to go on in November, and we're going to get to the other side of the elections in November, kick the can down the road, and we'll be here on the floor of Congress sometime after election day in November; and this Congress will, by order of the Speaker, bring a huge omnibus spending bill to the floor.

If it's like the last one, 3,600 pages, several hundred billion dollars issued the night before, dropped on the floor with roughly 60 minutes to debate the issue, no amendments, voted up or down, and the government shuts down if we voted down. I will vote "no." I would love to shut the government down for that kind of irresponsibility. It's unlikely that that will happen, however, because the Speaker has the votes and can do what she will.

So here we are, Mr. Speaker. This is a country that is built upon the rights that come from God, our liberty and our freedom. It's built upon this foundation that I declare to be the pillars of American exceptionalism. We are the unchallenged greatest Nation in the world, and we derive our strength from these pillars of exceptionalism, from free enterprise capitalism, from the rights that come from God, from our religious faith and foundation, this core of Judeo-Christianity that is America, and yet we're afraid to say so. We shy away and we shrink away from basic, simple utter truths.

I happen to have just heard a speech from, in town, the president of the NRA, Wayne LaPierre. He doesn't know I'm coming here to say this, but I was listening as he delivered his speech, and I wrote this down. He said, If you know the truth is on your side, say it and shout it as long as you can—excuse me. It might be say it and shout it as loud as you can. Stand up, shout them down, and don't you back down. Wayne LaPierre, president of the NRA, a man who has for a lifetime defended our Second Amendment and many of our other rights and freedoms, impressed me with the depth of his conviction and the clarity of his delivery tonight.

And now I take us to a subject matter that is on my mind to some degree, Mr. Speaker, and it has to do with what's going on from the White House and the Presidency through the Justice Department.

Now, the Attorney General, Eric Holder, came before the Judiciary Committee sometime in late May, right before we broke for the Memorial Day period of time, and he testified under oath that the Justice Department is not a partisan agency, that they don't operate on a partisan basis, that they are driven by the law. Well, I look at the President and the Attorney General and a number of the other representatives of this administration, it's hard for me to accept that statement on face value as being truthful because here's what I see and what I know: the President of the United States spoke out openly and plainly about the Arizona immigration law and made a case that in his view there was a built-in prejudice or bias or profile in the Arizona law because he said that if a mother were taking her daughter out to get some ice cream, they could find themselves having to produce their papers because of, presumably, their race. Arizona law forbids such a thing, but the President alleged such a thing.

Now, either the President misinformed the American people knowingly and willfully, or, Mr. Speaker, he hadn't read the bill. I'll opt to the side of he hadn't read the bill. I hope that's the case, and actually I believe that's the case.

Then we had Eric Holder, the Attorney General, who also alleged that there could be a profile take place under Arizona's immigration law that would bring about discrimination against people. It turns out that even though I asked Eric Holder before the Judiciary Committee, you have been charged by the President of the United States to use the force of the Justice Department to go against the Arizona law and seek to invalidate Arizona's immigration law, S. 1070, that bill that was drafted and put together by the fine and stellar State Senator, Russell Pearce of Arizona, that legislation—that has been signed into law and was enacted on the last day of July of this year—Eric Holder contends could bring about profiling.

Now, when someone says profiling in American Society today, they don't mean profiling according to, oh, let me say, whether you're a member of MENSA or whether you're a member of the Sierra Club. This is racial profiling whenever they say—when I say "they," I mean the administration, people on the left, the self-professed progressives. They mean racial profiling. So the President implies, if not alleges, racial profiling, empowered by Arizona's immigration law, S. 1070. The Attorney General does the same thing. The Attorney General concedes that the President has ordered the Justice Department to seek to invalidate Arizona's immigration law.

When I asked the Attorney General, under oath, before the Judiciary Committee, Point to me in the Constitution where you believe Arizona's immigration law has violated the United States Constitution, the Attorney General could not do so. In the alternative, I said, Then point to me to a Federal statute that you believe preempts Arizona's immigration law. The Attorney General could not do so. So, when I said, Point out then for me a case precedent, case law, that you believe is controlling, which would indicate that Arizona's immigration law might be unconstitutional or could be invalidated by a Federal court, the Attorney General could not point to a single case precedent either.

So he failed to be able to point to the Constitution, to a Federal statute that could preempt or to case law that controls, the Attorney General of the United States, but he is still using the resources and the authority of the Attorney General's office and the entire Justice Department of the United States to seek to invalidate Arizona's immigration law, which, for the record, Mr. Speaker, mirrors Federal law and is at least as constitutional as Federal immigration law. The Attorney General can't point to any place where that might violate, but he is still willing to pour in the resources and testify that his department is not political, and he admits that the President ordered him to use the department for what I believe to be political purposes.

For each of them to essentially imply or to confess that they didn't bother to read the Arizona law—but they wanted to tell the American people what to think about it—is political. It is unjust, and it is not consistent with the Constitution, with Federal statute, or with case law. That, Mr. Speaker, is what is going on.

In addition to this, on Arizona's law, we have other people who have weighed in on this. We have other people who have similar levels of, let me say, information to work with. The President doesn't read the bill, and he speaks out against it, and he seeks to drive a wedge based on race. The Attorney General is the one who is on the record saying the American people are cowards when it comes to race. Well, I'm not, but some are, and I understand why—because they turn their PC minyans against people who would speak out openly on these issues.

I think we should talk about race. I think we should talk about people who use race for political benefit—people like the President of the United States when he was informed of the incident of Professor Gates and Officer Crowley, in Cambridge, when Officer Crowley conducted himself consistent with, let me say, the rules of engagement for a peace officer in that community. When there was a call for him to come because someone was breaking into a residence in the neighborhood, Officer Crowley came and applied himself to that task as he had, I'm sure, a dozen times before, but Professor Gates objected to having law enforcement there to help protect his property. That message got to the President, and what does the President do? He sides with Professor Gates.

Barack Obama was wrong on the Gates issue, and all of the American people know it, and he could not bring himself to apologize to Officer Crowley or to clarify the issue. He was looking for a way out. That's why the President had the beer summit on the South Lawn. That's why Professor Gates and Officer Crowley came and sat down out on the South Lawn. It seemed odd to me that they brought one beer alone, on a single tray. They delivered it and went back and got another one. That seemed a little odd to me. That's what happened.

But, in a just world, the person who conducts himself in a just fashion is the one who receives the apology from the people who did not conduct themselves in a just fashion. I will argue, Mr. Speaker, that the President and Professor Gates had an obligation to apologize to Officer Crowley because, first, the President had prejudged that situation. His knee-jerk reaction defaulted in favor of the African American professor and against the Irish cop. That's what happened. I don't think anybody who watched this incident could think otherwise.

We have the President of the United States who defaulted in favor of alleging that there would be racial profiling taking place in Arizona because of their immigration law, and he perpetuated a flat-out misinterpretation, and it may well have been willful, of Arizona's immigration law to the rest of America.

Now, we should be able to look up to the President of the United States and to trust that he is properly briefed and that he is factual when he presents a position to the American people. That is American executive branch policy. We should be able to trust the President for that. The President should have people around him whom he trusts, who would go back and read the law and would brief the President.

Well, it's obvious to all of us who have watched this and who have read the law that the President spoke about Arizona's law and had not read it. If he were briefed, it was off of the MoveOn.org Web site. He is surrounded by people who read those Web sites, who believe them, and I'm not sure that the President has access to the objective truth given the people around him and given the way he has responded.

So you have two cases where the President's default reaction falls in the favor of an individual because of skin color as opposed to individuals because of the rule of law—or let me just say truth, justice, and the American way. There is a default mechanism in place. He has an Attorney General who follows that same path, who lectures the American people and who says that the American people are cowards when it comes to race. Well, he has not been a coward when it comes to race.

His administration, his agency—the Justice Department—has cancelled the most open-and-shut voter intimidation case in the history of America, which is the case of the New Black Panthers in Philadelphia, who much of America has seen on videotape—let me say YouTube. They are paramilitary uniformed individuals, the members of the New Black Panthers, who were standing there in berets, with big, old billy clubs, smacking them in their hands as white people came to vote, calling those people crackers and telling them, We're taking over this country. We're going to be in power after that.

That's a generalization of their statements, but the accuracy of that record is out there on YouTube for all the world to see. That case was open and shut. The case was made by the Justice Department under President Bush. As the handoff took place and went over to the Eric Holder Justice Department under President Obama, what happened, Mr. Speaker? Loretta King, in the Justice Department, cancelled the most open-and-shut voter intimidation case in the history of America because it would have brought about convictions on those New Black Panther party members. Assistant Attorney General Thomas Perez came before the Judiciary Committee and testified that they got the highest punishment allowed under the law—negotiated.

Mr. Speaker, it was not true. It's not true today. The statement that he made to the Judiciary Committee was false—he knew it the day he said it—and it was to misinform because he was under some pressure and needed to get off the hook. That's a matter of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. He was under oath. It is something that we should pursue. It's unlikely that we can get anywhere with it. That's Tom Perez. So the administration has cancelled the most open-and-shut voter intimidation case in the history of America. It was a done deal. They cancelled it.

The administration and Loretta King in the Justice Department cancelled also the will of the people in Kinston, North Carolina. That's K-I-N-S-T-O-N. They dropped the "G" because they didn't want to be another Kingston, North Carolina. They voted by referendum the will of the people. The number that I remember—and it's generally memorized but not specifically accurate—is 70-30, a significant landslide majority. They voted to end the partisan local elections in Kinston, North Carolina, and to no longer label the candidates with an "R" or a "D" for "Republican" or "Democrat" by their names. That was the will of the people.

Though, because Kinston is a covered district, controlled by the Voting Rights Act, if they are going to move a voting booth 10 feet down the hallway, they have to get the permission of the Justice Department under Federal law. So, under the Justice Department, Loretta King, apparently, is the one who speaks for the Justice Department, who speaks for Eric Holder. She issued a letter that cancelled the election results of Kinston, North Carolina, and she declared that they would have partisan elections—and the city council and the mayor of Kinston, North Carolina—because African Americans wouldn't know who to vote for if a candidate didn't have a "D" beside his name.

Mr. Speaker, that is fact. That is the letter that was written and issued by our Justice Department under the pen and the signature of Loretta King, under the guidance and control of Attorney General Holder. Now, when we talk about things that have a racist flavor to them, when presuming that African Americans can't figure out who to vote for unless they have a "D" beside their names, I guess you could make the argument that you would want to profile all the African Americans and declare that they're all Democrats. Therefore, it makes it simple if you just label the people they want to vote for with a "D."

I think that has all kinds of racial implications. I don't think those implications have any place in the application of the laws or in the application of the Constitution of the United States. There should be equal justice before the law. This Lady Justice needs to be blindfolded and needs to stay blindfolded. Everybody should be subjected to the same level of law and enforcement without regard to race, creed, color, ethnicity, national origin, and a number of other indicators, but I've listed most of them that are in Title VII of the Civil Rights Act right now.

Now, this goes on. This is a Justice Department that can't find a dollar or an individual to commit a minute, let alone a career or a team and a few million dollars, to investigate ACORN—ACORN, the corrupt, criminal enterprise that everybody knows today is a corrupt, criminal enterprise. It has been undermining the very foundation that sits underneath our Constitution, itself, which is, Mr. Speaker, legitimate elections. Legitimate elections, the faith in the legitimacy of our elections, is what keeps this constitutional Republic functioning and alive and gets us back to well. ACORN has damaged all of that. ACORN has threatened all of that. ACORN has diminished our liberty and our freedom, and it has undermined the very foundation for our Constitution.

Any Justice Department worth its salt would investigate ACORN, but Eric Holder can't touch that—whether it's an order of the President, who used to work for ACORN, I don't know. We should remember that the President of the United States worked for ACORN. He represented them in court. He represented them pro bono in court. Can you imagine being an attorney and representing somebody in court pro bono and not agreeing to their agenda? He also worked for them in the form of Project Vote, which was when President Barack Obama made his reputation for organizing communities and politics in Chicago. Project Vote is, part and parcel, ACORN.

The President of the United States is ACORN. He is identified with ACORN. He made his reputation with ACORN. He has worked for and with ACORN, and he has trained ACORN workers. When he said during the campaign to his supporters to "get in their face," it is pretty consistent with the message that they train ACORN activists, which is to "get in their face." Go intimidate some bankers while you're at it and see if you can get them to make more bad loans in bad neighborhoods. Let ACORN be positioned to judge whether lenders are making enough bad loans in bad neighborhoods.

This became a big component of what has undermined our economy and what has caused this downward spiral. The President was involved and complicit in the effort that brought about the undermining of our financial institutions in America by his involvement of working with, for, and in promoting and representing ACORN.

Then, when he was elected President of the United States, he sought to move the United States census from the Commerce Department into the White House. He could manage the census, the counting of the people—real or imagined—from the White House. The public uproar over ACORN caused him to back away from that and to sever the relationship that he had that ACORN was to be working as a contractor with the Census Department. Now, it doesn't mean because they decided not to have a formal contract with ACORN that ACORN wasn't going to be involved in the census. We know that people are policy. We know that there are a lot of ACORN people involved in the census. How could there not be with nearly a half a million people working to count the 306 or so million people who we are?

When we follow the money, when we track ACORN, the path leads us to the White House. ACORN should be investigated by any legitimate Justice Department. Kinston, North Carolina, didn't need to take place. The voice of the people said, We don't want partisan elections. We want to vote for the candidate. We don't want to vote for their political party. This was cancelled by Loretta King and the Justice Department.

We don't need to have voter intimidation with new Black Panthers out there with billy clubs and a Justice Department that would cancel the prosecution that was open and shut. We need no voter intimidation in America.

And where could you better send the message than putting those people that are the new Black Panthers, that are clearly wide open guilty, under the heaviest penalty allowed by law?

This is all part of the character and the makeup of this administration; this administration, who plays the race card; this administration, who defaults in favor of whichever minority they think might be the one that would most likely support their political party and their agenda. And I point to the new Black Panthers. I point to the President's remarks on the mother and the daughter going to get ice cream in Arizona. I point to the Justice Department canceling the prosecution, the open-and-shut case, by then almost closed case, of the new Black Panthers in Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia; of the city and their municipal referendum on no partisan elections in Kinston, North Carolina; the failure of the Justice Department to investigate ACORN; and the fact that the President spoke out—now this moves into a little bit different subject area, but it also ties, in my view, together—and the President demagoguing Arizona's immigration law, not having read it; the Attorney General doing the same thing, and finally admitting that he'd not read the bill. Janet Napolitano, the Secretary of Homeland Security, demagoguing Arizona's immigration law, not having read it, and having admitted that to Senator JOHN MCCAIN. And, let me see, the Assistant Secretary of State Michael Posner taking Arizona's immigration law all the way to the Chinese and saying, Well, we brought it up early and often.

Apparently, we're a sinful Nation because we believe in the rule of law, Mr. Speaker.

And let me see, who's left out of this? Oh, yes. John Morton, the Assistant Secretary, who is the head of ICE, Immigration and Customs Enforcement, who remarked that he wasn't committed to handling all the people that might be picked up by Arizona immigration or by Arizona's law enforcement officers in enforcement of Federal immigration law.

So this whole picture of this administration paints something that makes it really hard for government teachers to get this message down to their students. We have students that are juniors or seniors in high school, and you're teaching them government. They might be younger than that, but juniors and seniors in high school. They might read the paper and watch the news, and they sit in the classroom, and the teacher will say, We have a separation of powers. We have the legislative. We have the executive. And we have the judicial branches of government. These are three separate powers. Some teachers will teach they're separate but equal. That's another hour to talk about it. I don't believe they're equal. But they are separate.

To argue that they're separate and having students watch the news and hear that the President doesn't want to enforce immigration law because he doesn't agree with it; that he wants to hold law enforcement hostage until the American people accept his form of amnesty. The President doesn't get that kind of discretion. The President's job is to enforce the law. The Attorney General's job is to enforce the law. John Morton's job as head of ICE is to enforce the law. And the Secretary of Homeland Security Janet Napolitano's job is to enforce the law. Because you disagree with the law means nothing. You enforce that law whether you agree with it or not because you're not a policy maker. You're a law enforcer.

That's how our Constitution is set up. That's the power that's invested in them. If our Founding Fathers had wanted them to be legislators, they would have written it into the Constitution. If the people of this country wanted them to be legislators, I can tell you what they would have done. They would have amended the Constitution and had the power to change Federal law over to John Morton, Janet Napolitano, Eric Holder, for the President of the United States, or maybe even Michael Posner, the Assistant Secretary of State. Who knows.

That's not who we are. That's not the way it is. We must defend the rule of law. It is an essential pillar of American exceptionalism. We cannot sustain our greatness as a Nation if we're going to allow the discretionary—discretionary—enforcement of the law to come from executive branch people. And for a President of the United States, who taught constitutional law, albeit as an adjunct professor at the stellar University of Chicago School of Law, to think that that's the case, that he doesn't understand this any better, he thinks he can get away with it.

Well, I am here to say, no, the American people know better. We can read the Constitution. We can read our history. And we have access to the information necessary to keep an educated populace, coupled with an armed populace, coupled with the people that have enough self-confidence to be in a full-throated way to stand up and defend our liberty and defend our freedom. That's who we are, Mr. Speaker. That's who we must remain. That's the character that we must maintain. And we cannot allow ourselves to be diminished by a people who happen to find themselves right now sitting in controlling positions within this government that don't understand or willfully defy our values as a Nation or our Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, I couldn't have picked a better moment to yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KIND. Madam Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Navy Lieutenant Commander Dan Rieken, a native of Prescott, Wisconsin, who has led a distinguished career in the United States Navy and proudly served his country for more than 20 years.

LCDR Rieken first enlisted in the Navy as a Fire Controlman in 1984. After graduating from the University of Minnesota in 1991, LCDR Rieken was commissioned an Ensign in the Navy and has helped plan and manage ballistic missile defense programs, assisted in overseeing efforts to ensure the security and reliability of the Space and Naval Warfare Systems Command's through the Y2K transition.

Later, LCDR Rieken graduated with distinction from the Naval War College in 2003 and then received his Masters from the Naval Postgraduate School in 2004. Today, LCDR Rieken serves in the White House Communications Agency as a Presidential Communications Officer, System Engineer, and Program Manager for acquisitions, modernization, and future systems design.

On August 1, 2010, LCDR Rieken will retire from the United States Navy. His dedication to serving his country has been unwavering, regardless of party or ideology. He has worked to strengthen our country's security as our nation transitioned out of the Cold War era and into the Post-September 11th era. I congratulate LCDR Rieken on his retirement and thank him for his dedication to the safety and security of our country.

IN LOVING MEMORY OF CAFFIE
GREENE

HON. MAXINE WATERS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Ms. WATERS. Madam Speaker, I submit the following:

To Penny, Raymond, Steve and the family of Caffie Greene,

Please accept my heartfelt condolences for the loss of your beloved mother, grandmother, and my friend, Caffie Greene.

Caffie was a brilliant community activist, one of a handful of strong African American women who used their God-given talents to speak up for the least of these. She fought alongside the women of South Los Angeles who led the struggle for justice and equality for so many years. Women such as Lillian Mobley, Mary Henry, Johnnie Mae Tillman, Catherine Germany, and Nola Carter.

Caffie was outspoken, confrontational, and fearless. She had the ability to influence politicians and elected officials with her strong organizing skills. She had the capability to articulate the pain and concerns of poor people; and she never hesitated to show up to meetings at the school board, city hall, press conferences or anywhere else she needed to be.

I know we will all miss Caffie, her strength and unique brilliance. But we must continue her work and honor her legacy which I hope will inspire and motivate a new generation of leaders to dedicate their lives in the service of others as she did. May she rest in peace.

service to the young people of Connecticut by Althea Musgrove Norcott, who is retiring this month after over three decades of teaching and education administration in New Haven.

A Connecticut girl through-and-through, Althea was born in New Haven to George and Mavis Musgrove, educated at West Haven High School and the University of Connecticut, and received a sixth year in administration and supervision at Southern Connecticut State University. In fact, with the exception of several years spent as a special education teacher in the United States Virgin Islands, she has spent her entire life in service to our state and community. And we are grateful to her for it.

For 31 years, Althea has worked to improve the scholarship and experience of students at Hillhouse High School. Beginning as a special education teacher for emotionally disturbed and learning disabled students in 1978, she was named assistant principal in charge of the English and Foreign Language Departments in 1994. In both positions, Althea has transformed the lives of thousands of students for the better, and enriched the Hillhouse High community with her wisdom, patience, and grace.

Not content to leave her good works at the schoolhouse door, Althea also worked to broaden the horizons of her students through trips to Egypt, Kenya, and Zimbabwe, as part of the Ambassadors for International Education program. And she has given of herself in countless other ways outside of Hillhouse, including chairing the New Haven Host Town Program of the 1995 Special Olympics World Games and co-founding and, for the past 14 years, chairing the Freetown-New Haven Sister Cities Committee.

I thank Althea deeply for these decades of service to our mutual hometown, and I congratulate her, her husband Justice Fleming L. Norcott, Jr., and their children Daryl, Tiffany, and Candace, on reaching this important milestone. Congratulations, Althea, you have earned it.

Command Sergeant Major Frennier has served as the Senior Enlisted Advisor for U.S. Army Recruiting Command in Fort Knox, KY, since June of 2008. During his tenure, Command Sergeant Major Frennier dedicated his time to visiting all the soldiers that were a part of his command throughout the 50 states, four U.S. possessions, and three additional countries that housed these men and women.

His strong leadership skills helped propel over 50 of his soldiers to be inducted into the prestigious Sergeant Audie Murphy Club. Command Sergeant Major Frennier utilized these members by having them conduct volunteer mission within their local communities, fostering a relationship between the U.S. Army and civilians.

Throughout his career, Command Sergeant Major Frennier has not only been a remarkable example for the young men and women he has led, but a true warrior for his country. He always made sure to accomplish the task at hand, while taking care of the soldiers around him. Command Sergeant Major Frennier is an officer of tremendous nobility, honor and intellect.

I honor him today because of his dignified and dedicated commitment to the U.S. Army, U.S. Army Reserve, his soldiers, the citizens of this country and the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, I rise today to celebrate the League of Black Women on their annual leadership conference which commences today.

With nearly 10,000 members worldwide, the League provides continuing executive-level education. It also provides professional leadership coaching, mentor outreach to school-age students, support of small businesses, and with this conference, exposure of attendees to new relationships in the global corporate community.

More than 200 attendees from major corporations are expected to participate in five days of leadership development forums and executive presentations.

This year's conference theme is "Black Women 2010: Global Ready." As a member of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, I was honored to receive an invitation to participate in this year's forum titled "Women of Color in the U.S. Intelligence Community" and share insight on the prospects of women in Intelligence rising to higher leadership ranks.

AMERICAN JOBS, CLOSING TAX LOOPHOLES AND PREVENTING OUTSOURCING ACT

HON. BETTY MCCOLLUM

OF MINNESOTA

Ms. MCCOLLUM. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 4213, the American Jobs, Closing Tax Loopholes and Preventing Outsourcing Act. This legislation accelerates our economic recovery by creating or saving over 1 million jobs and by providing emergency aid to American families.

Our economic recovery is thankfully underway. The private sector is working again. Jobs are being added. The task before Congress is finding the right balance between addressing the federal budget deficits and debt and supporting American families still struggling with the lingering effects of the recession.

This bill is a life-preserver for the millions of Americans who are still looking for work. For our youth experiencing record-high unemployment and looking for work this summer, this bill allocates funding that will support 350,000 jobs. It also provides emergency funding for a much-needed unemployment insurance extension through the end of November 2010. In addition to assisting those Americans hardest hit by the recession, these resources will stimulate the economy—every $1 spent in unemployment benefits generates at least $1.63 in economic activity. H.R. 4213 also addresses a major concern for seniors by preventing pay cuts that could discourage doctors from seeing Medicare patients.

H.R. 4213 also makes long-term investments to support economic growth by extending tax incentives for research and development and American-made clean energy. This legislation will save and create jobs through Build America Bonds and Recovery Zone Bonds while rebuilding American infrastructure. This bill restores credit to small businesses and provides tax relief to middle class families, who are experiencing the lowest taxes in 60 years.

The many investments are fully offset by closing tax loopholes, ensuring that Wall Street investment fund managers paid their fair share of taxes on their income and ensuring that corporations stop abusing the foreign tax credit by shipping American jobs overseas. This legislation also begins to hold oil corporations accountable by increasing the fees they pay to the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund. Most importantly, the entire bill complies with statutory pay-as-you-go.

Let me be clear. Our economy will recover and thrive again—we are on the right path—but until we reach a full and vibrant recovery, we have a responsibility to extend the safety-net of unemployment benefits for the millions out of work while we enact measures to create jobs. For all these reasons, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation and create American jobs, close tax loopholes, and prevent outsourcing.

IN RECOGNITION OF MANDINGO TSHAKA

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mr. ACKERMAN. Madam Speaker, I rise today to extend my deepest thanks and most sincere gratitude to Mandingo Tshaka, a resident of Bayside, New York, who first identified and advocated for the need to acknowledge the significant role that slave labor played in the construction of the United States Capitol several years ago. This week, Mr. Tshaka will be traveling to Washington, DC to witness his vision realized when Speaker PELOSI and Majority Leader REID will unveil a series of plaques that honor and remember the contributions made by enslaved African Americans during the building of the Capitol. Thanks to his work and perseverance, the United States government will for the first time acknowledge the regrettable, humiliating, embarassing, and humbling truth that slave labor helped to construct the very building that houses democracy in our Nation's capital.

In 2005, a Congressionally mandated study confirmed that slave labor was used extensively in the construction of the Capitol. The study confirmed what Mr. Tshaka already knew: One of the most egregious human rights violations in the history of the modern world helped erect the United States Capitol. It is to Mr. Tshaka's enduring credit that Congress will publicly and permanently recognize this fact this week.

Throughout his life, Mr. Tshaka has tirelessly dedicated himself to advocating for civil, minority and community rights. A lifelong resident of New York City, he has contributed immeasurably to the improvement of his community and of his country. While this week's ceremony will be bittersweet, I am pleased that Mr. Tshaka will be present to witness the fulfillment of his latest endeavor to promote civil rights and awareness.

I look forward to welcoming Mr. Tshaka to the Capitol for this historic unveiling and I am proud to see Congress recognize the truth behind the Capitol's construction. I ask my colleagues in the House to join me in recognizing Mandingo Tshaka and thank him for helping to make this week's ceremony a reality.

IN HONOR OF STANLEY AND BETTY SHEINBAUM

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

Mr. KUCINICH. Madam Speaker, I rise today in honor and recognition of Stanley and Betty Sheinbaum as they celebrate their 90th birthdays. The Sheinbaums have been partners in life since 1964, with a shared devotion to each other, to their families, and to causes of peace and justice. Their support and work on behalf of humanitarian and progressive causes continues to strengthen the democratic foundation of our nation and the world.

Mr. Sheinbaum grew up in a poor, working class neighborhood in New York City. His family was hit hard by the Depression; their financial struggles during his formative years left an indelible imprint on him—clarifying his sense of justice, and strengthening his compassion and empathy for others, especially for the poor. After high school, he worked at various jobs until he joined the service, where he served during WWII. After the war, he re-enrolled in high school courses to elevate his grades and he was eventually accepted at Oklahoma A&M, where he did well enough to transfer to Stanford University. He graduated from Stanford with a degree in Economics with high honors, subsequently moving to Paris as a Fulbright scholar.

In the early 1960's, Mr. Sheinbaum's previous support of U.S. military involvement in South Vietnam began to fade. He became an active member and leader at the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions—an organization that attracted the nation's intellectual elites. Mr. Sheinbaum quickly impressed members with his strong intellect and superior debating skills. He soon met and fell in love with activist Betty Warner, daughter of Warner Bros. co-founder, Harry Warner.

Born in 1920, Ms. Warner was a like-minded political activist who shared her future husband's social and political inclinations. She was born in Hollywood and grew up in the glory days of the movie industry. The daughter of a movie mogul, she lived a life adorned with pop artists and movie stars. Her family came to the United States in the early 1900s seeking democracy, freedom, justice and economic security. Although her father became famous, he began as a cobbler and a salesman. He instilled within her a strong sense of hard work, equality and justice. She became involved in community and grassroots politics and organized to fight McCarthyism.

Stanley Sheinbaum and Betty Warner were married in 1964. The Sheinbaums' sense of philanthropy and service to others has been a shared vision since their marriage. In addition to her activism, Betty Sheinbaum is a passionate artist. She is a successful sculptor, painter, artist and gallery owner. She uses her lifetime of experiences in her beautiful work and incorporates the imagery she has discovered on her travels throughout the world. She has studied with Howard Warshaw, Keith Finch, Jan Stussy, Mark Strickland and George Small.

In addition to donating to worthy causes over four decades, the Sheinbaums have continued to donate their valuable time. Among his countless accomplishments, Mr. Sheinbaum has served as head of the ACLU Foundation of Southern California and as President of the Los Angeles Police Commission during the difficult years between 1991 and 1993. While serving as a Regent of the University of California, he fought for divestment from South Africa. For the last 10 years, he has been the publisher of New Perspectives Quarterly. Both Betty and Stanley continue to serve on the Advisory Board for the Liberty Hill Foundation, an organization which invests in changemakers and equips them with the skills and relationships they need to build power and advance social justice.

As well as being active in their own communities, the Sheinbaums have used their resources and their influence to effect global change. In 1988, Mr. Sheinbaum led a delegation of American Jews to the Middle East where he befriended Yasser Arafat. Thanks in part to the efforts of the Sheinbaums, Arafat renounced terror and finally recognized Israel's right to exist. Respected for his ability to negotiate with world leaders, Mr. Clinton would later ask Mr. Sheinbaum to serve as a back-channel envoy to Syria and help influence the course of nations.

The passion, dedication and commitment of the Sheinbaums have made a difference in the lives of many. Their historic careers are surpassed only by their love for each other. Madam Speaker and Colleagues, please join me in honor and recognition of Stanley and Betty Sheinbaum on the occasion of their 90th birthdays, as we extend to them both the thanks of a grateful nation for all they have done together to make our world a better place. They are truly great Americans.

IN LOVING MEMORY OF PAUL H.
DEVAN

HON. MAXINE WATERS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Ms. WATERS. Madam Speaker, I submit the following:

To family of Paul H. DeVan,

It is with great pain and sorrow that I express my condolences to you, all of Paul's friends and the entire Head Start family.

Paul and I were very good friends—we met and worked together starting in the early 1970's in the Head Start Program. Paul was an activist, organizer, and a promoter of fairness, justice, and equality for poor people, people of color and people who simply needed to have friends to assist them in locating resources to pursue a decent quality of life.

I loved Paul's kindness, his love of people and his willingness to work hard for the betterment of our community. Paul was the kind of man that understood his strength and power. He had the confidence that is so necessary to make things happen and get the job done.

Unfortunately there are not many Paul DeVan's left in our communities that are willing to meet the challenge of discrimination, poverty and hopelessness. Paul had health challenges for quite some time but never gave up. He loved the Head Start Program and was the Founder of Training and Research Foundation, which provides resources to parents to help children fulfill their educational destinies.

Paul and Elaine were a wonderful team that accomplished so much. This home going for Paul must also be a thank you for all he has done for so many. Paul, I love you and will miss you very much.

THE RETIREMENT OF MR.
RICHARD MANN

HON. JOHN H. ADLER

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mr. ADLER of New Jersey. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor Mr. Richard Mann for his dedicated service to our students, the Cherry Hill Community, and the residents of Camden County.

For 37 years, Mr. Richard Mann has dutifully served the students of Cherry Hill as a physical education instructor. A community servant in every aspect, Mr. Mann worked for the citizens of Camden County as an employee of the Voorhees Recreation Department for 25 years, and managed the Cherry Hill Skating Center for 26 years.

IN HONOR AND RECOGNITION OF THE 25TH ANNIVERSARY OF COMMUNITY CHALLENGE AND OF DAVID LARUE

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mr. KUCINICH. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor and recognize 25 years of amazing work by the staff and supporters of Community Challenge. In giving specific mention to one of Community Challenge's biggest long-time supporters, David LaRue—I not only honor him, but also all those others who have given of themselves to create a better future for our children.

Community Challenge, a branch of Recovery Resources that focuses on keeping our children healthy, happy and free from the devastation of drug and alcohol abuse, has strengthened and empowered the lives of countless youth and families throughout our west side communities.

As with many great initiatives, its origins are humble. In 1985 a small group of Rocky River residents acted when they became concerned about alcohol and drug abuse by local children and teens; they formed the Rocky River Community Challenge, which worked on education and prevention. As the organization expanded, 'Rocky River' was dropped from its name but its mission has remained the same—to improve education and prevent abuse.

Today, I also honor David LaRue for the tireless support he has given Community Challenge. Mr. LaRue's dedication to the mission and programs of Community Challenge is evidenced by the significant sponsorship funding from the company of which he is Vice President and Chief Operating Officer, Forest City Enterprises. In 1992 Mr. LaRue personally led the effort to start Community Challenge's Basketball Challenge Cup, an annual event bringing together teens and families for an evening of fun and competition in an alcohol-free environment.

Madam Speaker and colleagues, please join me in honor and recognition of the 25 years of tireless effort by all the staff and supporters of Community Challenge and of David LaRue whose leadership, sponsorship, and support of Community Challenge's programs and events has made a real difference in the lives of so many.

HONORING THE 60TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF DIABETES AND DIGESTIVE AND KIDNEY DISEASES

HON. FRANK PALLONE, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mr. PALLONE. Madam Speaker, I rise today to introduce a resolution with my good friend

Mr. SHIMKUS of Illinois that commemorates the 60th anniversary of the National Institute of Diabetes and Digestive and Kidney Diseases (NIDDK) and its continuing leadership and achievements in conducting and supporting biomedical research to improve health.

The NIDDK leads the Nation's Federal commitment in research, research training, science-based education and health information dissemination with respect to diabetes and other endocrine and metabolic diseases, digestive and liver diseases, nutritional disorders, obesity, kidney disease, urologic diseases, and hematologic diseases.

The Institute was originally established in 1950 through the Omnibus Medical Research Act as the National Institute of Arthritis and Metabolic Diseases. The Institute was renamed several times during the ensuing decades, and was renamed in 1986 as the National Institute of Diabetes and Digestive and Kidney Diseases.

The chronic and costly disease and disorders within the Institute's mission affect millions of Americans, ranging from some of the nation's most common diseases and disorders to those which are rarer. The NIDDK supports research by extramural scientists at academic and other medical research institutions across the nation, in addition to research by scientists in the Institute's intramural program. The Institute has continually pursued research efforts to benefit all individuals burdened by these diseases and disorders: men, women, older and younger adults, children, minority populations who are disproportionately affected by many of these diseases, and those from economically-disadvantaged backgrounds.

60 years of NIDDK-supported research discoveries have dramatically increased vital understanding of the biologic mechanisms and behavioral and environmental factors that contribute to health and disease. This knowledge has propelled the development of intervention strategies. Specifically, this research has led to the prevention, diagnostic, and treatment strategies for individuals who have, or are at risk for, diseases and disorders within the Institute's mission, leading to remarkable improvements in health and quality of life.

The NIDDK has also been a leader in research training and mentoring efforts, from summer programs for high school and college students with special opportunities for under-represented minorities, to fellowships for graduate and medical students and postdoctoral researchers, to support for early-career and established investigators, in order to ensure that critical biomedical research will continue into the future. In addition, the Institute sponsors education and outreach programs to improve health by disseminating science-based information to patients and their families, those at risk for disease, healthcare professionals, and the general public.

The Institute's research and research strategies have also allowed them to be a leader in collaborative and coordinated research efforts and science-based education programs to maximize the Federal investment in research and synergize expertise across the NIH, with other Federal agencies, and with public and private organizations.

Today, Mr. SHIMKUS and I introduce a resolution to commemorate NIDDK's 60th anniversary and commend NIDDK for its leadership in research, research training, and science-based education programs.

I urge my colleagues to join us in support of this resolution not only to commemorate the NIDDK's 60th anniversary, but also to show continued support for the Institute in its research, education, and discovery efforts of the future.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION 3 OF THE SIXTIETH LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF WYOMING

HON. CYNTHIA M. LUMMIS

OF WYOMING

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mrs. LUMMIS. Madam Speaker, I commend the State of Wyoming for enacting a resolution that reinforces the 10th Amendment to the Constitution. Enrolled Joint Resolution 3 of the Sixtieth Legislature of the State of Wyoming demands that Congress cease and desist from enacting mandates that are beyond the enumerated powers granted to the Congress by the United States Constitution.

This resolution joins a groundswell of support across our nation for a return to the federalist principles in our Constitution. I am proud to insert this resolution into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on behalf of the people of Wyoming.

Citizens, businesses and States across the country are bracing for the impact of the heavy handed government mandates in President Obama's health care plan. Momentum persists among some in Congress for additional federal mandates, taxes, and regulations that will burden State budgets and put entrepreneurs in Main Street America out of business.

There is another way. Our nation's founders left us a recipe for freedom and opportunity in our Constitution, under which the people of the United States consented to a government with limited powers. As stated in the 10th Amendment, all powers not given to the federal government by the Constitution are reserved for the States and the people. I have co-founded in the House of Representatives a 10th Amendment Task Force to advance the principles of federalism and disperse power back to States, local governments and individuals.

Before coming to Washington, I spent my entire adult life dealing with State issues—as a rancher, as a State legislator, and as State Treasurer. I am now astounded by the kinds of issues Members of Congress feel are appropriate for federal intervention.

States know their people better. They know their issues better. Let's return to States what States do best and maintain a strong limited government in Washington to do what it does best—securing the freedom, strength and integrity of this country.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 3, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—SIXTIETH LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF WYOMING, 2010 BUDGET SESSION

Whereas, the tenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States reads as follows: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."; and

Whereas, the tenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States defines the total scope of federal power as being that specifically granted by the Constitution of the United States and no more; and

Whereas, the scope of the power defined by the tenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States means that the federal government was created by the states specifically to be an agent of the states; and

Whereas, the states are demonstrably treated as agents of the federal government; and

Whereas, many powers assumed by the federal government and federal mandates are directly in violation of the tenth amendment to the United States Constitution; and

Whereas, the interstate commerce clause in article 1, section 8 of the Constitution of the United States provides that Congress shall have the power: "To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with Indian Tribes;" and

Whereas, the interstate commerce clause is limited to the federal government regulating trade between the states and between the states and other nations, to help prevent conflicts between states over commercial activities and to prevent the erection of barriers to commerce between the states; and

Whereas, the interstate commerce clause should not be used to provide Congress with authority to regulate matters that are primarily intrastate with only an insignificant or collateral effect upon interstate commerce; and

Whereas, many federal laws are beyond the scope and intent of the interstate commerce clause and the tenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas, the tenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States assures that we, the people of the United States of America and each sovereign state in the union of states, now have, and have always had, rights the federal government may not usurp; and

Whereas, article 4, section 4, of the Constitution of the United States says: "The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government," and the ninth amendment to the Constitution of the United States adds "The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people."; and

Whereas, Congress may not simply commandeer the legislative and regulatory processes of the states. Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Members of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming:

Section 1. That the Wyoming Congressional delegation and Congress take action to initiate the amendment process provided by article 5 of the Constitution of the United States to amend the tenth amendment and article 1, section 8 (the interstate commerce clause), of the Constitution of the United States.

Section 2. That Congress amend the tenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States as follows, with proposed changes indicated in underscored text:

The powers not expressly delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people. This amendment shall be considered by all courts as a rule of interpretation and construction in any case involving an interpretation of any constitutional power claimed by the Congress.

Section 3. That Congress amend the interstate commerce clause, article 1, section 8, of the Constitution of the United States as follows, with proposed changes indicated in underscored text:

To directly regulate Commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian Tribes, with no authority in Congress to regulate matters that are primarily intrastate with only an insignificant or collateral effect upon interstate commerce;

Section 4. That Congress shall specify that the amendments to the tenth amendment and the interstate commerce clause, article 1, section 8, of the Constitution of the United States, as provided herein, shall be operative upon ratification by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several states, provided that such ratification shall occur within seven years from the date of the submission of the amendments to the states by Congress.

Section 5. That this state calls on its co-states for an expression of their sentiments on the need to amend the tenth amendment and article 1, section 8, of the Constitution of the United States as provided in this resolution.

Section 6. (a) That the Secretary of State of Wyoming transmit copies of this resolution:

(i) To the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress and to the Wyoming Congressional Delegation, with a request that the Wyoming Congressional delegation take all reasonable and necessary actions to initiate the amendment process to amend the Constitution of the United States consistent with the language proposed in this resolution and that this resolution be officially entered in the congressional record as a memorial to the Congress of the United States of America; and

(ii) To the speaker of the house of representatives and president of the senate, or their equivalent, and the governor of each of the other forty-nine states.

HONORING JIM CASSIDY

HON. MICHAEL H. MICHAUD

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mr. MICHAUD. Madam Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Jim Cassidy on his retirement from St. Mary's Health System and to recognize his many accomplishments while serving as its President.

Taking charge during a period when St. Mary's was dealing with financial instability, Jim worked step by step to expand wellness services and access to quality medical care. He quickly stabilized St. Mary's finances and set to work expanding the system's workforce and budget. Today, approximately 2,000 individuals are employed under an annual operating budget of $252 million.

With St. Mary's on solid footing, Jim turned his attention towards increasing care and services in the region. From 2000 to 2010, he oversaw the opening of the Women's Health Pavilion, the Center for Joint Replacement, St. Mary's d'Youville Pavilion Rehab Center, a new St. Mary's Campus in Auburn and the modernization of the Emergency Center at St. Mary's Regional Medical Center. This extraordinary feat was mirrored by St. Mary's outreach in downtown Lewiston. St. Mary's Food Pantry, Lots to Gardens and St. Mary's Nutrition Center of Maine not only provide emergency food assistance to the residents of the greater Androscoggin County but also promote healthy nutrition and eating habits. Other programs, such as the Neighborhood Housing Initiative and B Street Health Center, have expanded affordable access to shelters and healthcare for Lewiston's low income residents. Each of these programs owes a piece of their success to Jim's leadership.

For these works and for other charity programs he established, Jim was honored by the American Hospital Association and by the Catholic Health Association. The remarkable positive impact Jim has had on the community is commendable and has inspired countless others. With his retirement on June 17, 2010, St. Mary's Health System will lose one of its finest leaders in its 125 year history. His legacy of community outreach will surely be continued for generations to come.

Madam Speaker, please join me in congratulating Jim Cassidy on his retirement and thanking him for his dedicated service to his community.

IN HONOR AND REMEMBRANCE OF ERIN K. EHRBAR AND ANDREW
J. EHRBAR

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mr. KUCINICH. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor and remember a brother and a sister who left this world far too soon. Erin and Andrew Ehrbar were both tragically taken away from us at the tender ages of 16 and 13, respectively. I stand with those in our community grieving for them and for their families.

Erin and Andrew both loved sports, music, and spending time with friends and family. They were extraordinary children who lived their lives with great energy, laughter, joy, kind hearts and a spirit of generosity. Today, we remember them, in the House and in the nation.

As we grieve, we also celebrate the joy and happiness that Erin and Andrew brought to their friends and family. Erin, a junior at Highland High School, played on the girl's varsity soccer team; Andrew, a seventh grader at Highland Middle School, played baseball, basketball, and sang in the school choir.

Madam Speaker and colleagues, I ask you to join me in honor and remembrance of Erin K. Ehrbar and Andrew J. Ehrbar, whose young lives were framed by the unwavering love of their family and friends. In addition to honoring the memory of their late father, James, we offer condolences to their mother, Laura; to their big sister, Melissa and their little brother, Sean; to their stepfather, Chris DePiero; their grandparents, Thomas and Barbara Donovan; James and Marilyn Ehrbar; Jerry and Roberta DePiero; and the many others who loved them. The legacies of Erin and Andrew will continue on in the lives of others, through organ and eye donation, and their gentle spirits will forever hold a sacred place in the hearts of those who loved them.

IN TRIBUTE TO THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mr. GALLEGLY. Madam Speaker, I rise in tribute to the Commonwealth of Australia and the Australian Maritime Safety Authority (AMSA) for its quick and effective response to locating and rescuing Abby Sunderland, a 16-year-old sailor from Thousand Oaks, California, whose sailboat was severely damaged in the Indian Ocean.

Abby was attempting to sail solo around the world when rough seas tore the mast from her boat, Wild Eyes, rendering cell phone communication with her sail team impossible. Abby activated two distress beacons, whose signal was picked up by the AMSA's Rescue Coordination Centre.

At the time, Wild Eyes was in the search and rescue region of the Maritime Rescue Coordination Centre at La Reunion, which is operated by France. However, AMSA immediately offered assistance. La Reunion asked for air search assistance and an AMSA crew departed from Perth at first light in a QANTAS A-330 Airbus passenger aircraft.

Before the aircraft arrived on the scene, Abby's beacons indicated Wild Eyes had drifted into AMSA's search and rescue region. She was spotted at about 4 p.m. Australian time (11 p.m. PDT) about 2,000 nautical miles from western Australia. The AMSA crew made radio contact and found that Abby was alive and well, although with some scrapes and bruises.

AMSA then coordinated with La Reunion to have a ship retrieve her from Wild Eyes. About 40 hours after Abby activated her beacons, the French fishing vessel, Ile De La Reunion had Abby safely on board. AMSA had dispatched a Global Express aircraft to the scene, which provided top cover during Abby's transfer to the fishing vessel and served as a communications relay between Wild Eyes and Ile De La Reunion.

Media reports this morning stated that the crew of Ile De La Reunion delivered Abby to the remote Kerguelen Island yesterday afternoon, where she will catch a French patrol boat for the next leg of her journey home.

Madam Speaker, while we are grateful to the French fishermen and French authorities for their role in Abby's rescue, it is the Australian government that took lead in ensuring she was found and rescued. I personally called Australian ambassador to the United States, His Excellency Kim Beazley, AC, on Friday to thank him for Australia's role in locating and rescuing one of my constituents at considerable time and cost to them. I would also like to publicly thank the Australian Maritime Safety Authority, the QANTAS crew, and all the support personnel who made Abby's rescue possible. I know my colleagues join me in thanking our ally and friend for her quick response to one of our citizens in distress.

RECOGNIZING THE YOUTH LEADERSHIP PROGRAM GRADUATES OF WANDELL ELEMENTARY SCHOOL

HON. SCOTT GARRETT

OF NEW JERSEY

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mr. GARRETT of New Jersey. Madam Speaker, today, the Saddle River Police Department will hold its Youth Leadership Program graduation ceremony for the students of Wandell Elementary School located in Saddle River, NJ. The participants of this important program have made a commitment to say "no" to drugs, underage drinking, and gang violence. They have done this with the support of Chief of Police Timothy McWilliams and Detective Timothy Gerity.

Through opening the lines of communication between local law enforcement and youth, the Saddle River Youth Leadership Program empowers youth with the confidence and courage to say no to drugs and also defeats the negative cultural influences which they are challenged with on a daily basis.

I am immensely proud of my young constituents who participated in this program at Wandell Elementary School; thus, I would like to recognize each of them for taking this vital step towards positive citizenship:

Jack Bush, James Butler, Natalie Formento, Alanna Fullerton, Grace Hinchin, Kaaitlin Hofer, Maxx King, David LaManna, Lucy Pennell, Mary Pless, Aram Rashduni, Hannah Rogers, Michael Saks, Spencer Shih, Maya Silberman, Britni Strobeck, Richard Vincent, Emma Walsh, Taylor Wiener, Devin Bovino, Ryan Carr, Stephanie Devli, Kathleen Dorce, Zachary Dreznin, Elizabeth Dutko, Kristen Egan, Hana Friedman, Melissa Katsapis, Maeson Nolan, Alexander Rohrscheidt, Benjamin Saks, Katharin Spence, Mark Tseytin, Carl Villegas, Euan Walker, and Jaqueline Wiebye.

IN LOVING MEMORY OF THE LEGENDARY OLLIE WOODSON

HON. MAXINE WATERS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Ms. WATERS. Madam Speaker, I submit the following:

To Juanita and the Family,

Like most of his fans, I had always admired Ollie Woodson the performer, from afar, as one of the mainstays of "the temptin' Temptations." When I finally got to meet the person—your husband, father, and grandfather—at a birthday celebration in the home of my dear friend Glodean White, I was really impressed with how friendly, warm and down-to-earth he was. Since that time, whenever I had the good fortune to see him, Ollie would always go out of his way to say hello and make that personal connection. His close friends tell me that was the generous spirit of the man, forever responding to those he loved.

We all know about the incredible voices and intricate dance moves that made a Temptations concert a must-see. But I specifically remember a wonderful solo performance Ollie did for the National Newspaper Publishers' Association at the Democratic National Convention in Denver. I was not only knocked out by his sheer ability to entertain but I thought about how Ollie and the rest of the Motown family have really been cultural ambassadors for America, all over the world.

As successful as he undoubtedly was both as a performer and producer, I will also cherish some of those special times right here at City of Refuge, when Ollie would grace the church and Bishop Noel Jones with a wonderful gospel song. He certainly never forgot his roots.

So today, let us celebrate both the performer and the man, who with his God-given talent has earned a place in history and in our hearts—Ali Ollie Woodson. May he rest in peace.

TRIBUTE TO LEWIS COUNTY VFW

HON. WILLIAM L. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mr. OWENS. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize the Lewis County chapter of Veterans of Foreign Wars and to congratulate the group on their 50th anniversary. For over a half century, the VFW has served as the foundation for local veterans outreach and assistance, as well as a major supporter of our community in Lowville and surrounding areas.

Just as our soldiers pledge to leave no man or woman behind, the Lewis County VFW carries on that promise to our current and future veterans, helping all of us make good on the pledge to provide real opportunities to our troops upon their return from service.

The Lewis County VFW embodies what their national organization strives for—providing services that extend beyond the realm of veterans helping veterans. Their outreach and service in our region is invaluable and encourages community participation and volunteerism from both those in the armed forces and civilians alike.

From help in community food kitchens, work in blood drives, and assisting our veterans to receive their hard-earned benefits, the Lewis County VFW in New York's 23rd Congressional District truly knows how to accomplish their mission in making our area a better place.

Our local VFW in Lewis County increases civic pride and its 50 great years of serving our community is nothing short of remarkable. I would like to again thank them for their service and wish them the best moving forward.

Mr. ADLER of New Jersey. Madam Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mr. Albert J. Olizi for his outstanding service as District Governor of District 16C of the Audubon Lions Club for 2009–2010.

He has been named "Lion of the Year" multiple times, was honored with the International President's Recognition Award in 2007, and has held multiple positions within his local club, including President.

Throughout his term as District Governor, Mr. Albert Olizi has dedicated an enormous amount of time, energy, and dedication to fulfill the roles and responsibilities of the position. Time and again, he has proven to be an outstanding leader for the Lions of District 16C.

Madam Speaker, I ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me on congratulating Mr. Albert Olizi. The people of your community, the people of New Jersey, and the people of America thank you for your service.

Mr. KUCINICH. Madam Speaker, I rise today in honor and remembrance of Lenore C. "Lori" Wendell, whose life was filled with family, friends and service on behalf of our community.

Mrs. Wendell was the cherished wife of the late Richard. Together, they lovingly raised their daughters, Jennifer and Heather. She was a devoted mother and enjoyed a close relationship with her grandchildren, Jamie, Patrick, Anthony, Quinn and Allan.

HONORING RAUL H. CASTRO, FORMER GOVERNOR OF ARIZONA

HON. ED PASTOR

OF ARIZONA

Mr. PASTOR of Arizona. Madam Speaker, while many have written of the inspirational story surrounding Raul Hector Castro, Arizona's first Hispanic Governor, it seems only fitting that in today's highly charged atmosphere of anti-immigrant sentiment, we take the occasion of Governor Castro's 94th birthday on June 12th to examine his life as one who has surely proven the American dream is achievable. In fact, he has not only shown that dream is achievable, he has also underscored the fact that those pursuing the dream contribute mightily to the strength of our nation.

Born in Mexico, the second youngest of 12 children raised in Arizona by an immigrant copper miner and a mother who was a well-trusted midwife, it would have been easy for him to get lost in the shuffle of such a large family that had to scratch a living from the ground to survive, but early on, he recognized the value of setting goals and not giving up until they are met. Based on that determination, he parlayed his natural athleticism and keen mind in high school into a scholarship to Arizona State Teacher's College.

While no stranger to racism and discrimination when he graduated from college and become a naturalized citizen in 1939, he still had not anticipated the rejection he would experience when applying for teaching positions because school districts were unwilling to hire an Hispanic teacher. Discouraged, but not defeated, he traveled America for several years until he landed a civil service job as a foreign-service clerk for the U.S. State Department in Sonora, Mexico. Many would have been satisfied with a secure position in the federal government, but he was determined to further his station in life, becoming a Spanish instructor at the University of Arizona so that he might attend the institution's law school. Passing the Arizona State Bar in 1949, he established an enviable career over the next five decades that took him from Pima County Attorney through the appointment by two United States Presidents to three ambassadorships, in addition to becoming Arizona's first Hispanic governor. Throughout this process, he never lost sight of the importance of an education and his mother's mantra that he could accomplish whatever he set his mind to. As a result, when he did accomplish more than many ever hoped for, he didn't forget the four miles he and his Hispanic friends had to walk to school while the buses filled with Anglo children passed them by, and he worked tirelessly to rectify these kinds of incomprehensible bigotry.

For example, as a judge he presided over a full-schedule of cases, but was particularly disturbed by the vulnerable at-risk youngsters in the juvenile court system who were being shoved under the rug by society. This inspired him to take time every Monday to check attendance records at the local high schools. In the evenings, he would visit with families of students exhibiting high rates of absenteeism in an effort to get their support in encouraging the students to stay in school and make the most of that experience. This concern for improving society continued throughout his career. Sometimes limited to simply seeing Hispanic children given equal access to the YMCA, to concentrating on improving human rights abroad while serving as an ambassador, he never lost sight of using his opportunities to make a difference.

Throughout our history it has been proven that immigrants are far more than just an inexpensive work force. They are in fact a valuable asset to this country and Raul H. Castro is an outstanding example of one such person. Therefore, in light of today's divisive view of immigration, his story should be noted as a symbol of how the United States has benefited from those who value this country so much, and that after moving here to build a better life for their families, they remain dedicated to making sure that they improve our nation for future generations.

CONGRATULATING THE BENJAMIN
FAMILY ON EIGHTY-FIVE YEARS OF ENTREPRENEURSHIP

HON. ROSA L. DeLAURO

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Ms. DeLAURO. Madam Speaker, I rise to commemorate the 85th anniversary of Carroll Cut-Rate Furniture, a local family-owned-and-operated business that has graced the Greater New Haven community for generations.

Begun as Carroll Cut-Rate Cosmetics by Samuel Benjamin in 1925, this small business has passed down through the Benjamin family and thrived through boom times and depression, peacetime and war, and even, in 1951, through a notable shift from discount cosmetics to the furniture trade.

Over the course of these 85 years, Samuel, his sons Jerry and Don, and his grandsons Cary and Bruce have always kept an eye to innovation, quality, and above all customer service. With ten full-time employees, the Benjamins have also worked to promote jobs in our state and across the country by stocking their store with Connecticut mattresses and American-made furniture.

The story of Carroll Cut-Rate Furniture is not only a triumph of small enterprise and business savvy. It shows that through hard work, perseverance, and ingenuity, the American dream still comes true. I salute the Benjamin family on this 85-year milestone, and I look forward to seeing them continue as a staple of our Connecticut community.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE GAL-VESTON HISTORICAL FOUNDATION

HON. RON PAUL

OF TEXAS

Mr. PAUL. Madam Speaker, on June 26, 2010, the Galveston Historical Foundation will celebrate its acquisition of the historic 1861 U.S. Custom House. I was pleased to help make this possible by sponsoring legislation, H.R. 2121, which directed the General Services Administration (GSA) to sell the Custom House to the Galveston Historical Foundation. H.R. 2121 passed the House by voice vote on September 9, 2009. It is therefore a great pleasure to extend my congratulations to the Galveston Historical Foundation for acquiring the U.S. Custom House.

The U.S. Custom House is the oldest non-military federal building in Galveston. The two-story structure was built in 1861 and has served many important historical functions, including housing the ceremony that officially ended the Civil War in Galveston. In 1917, construction began on a federal courtroom located on the second floor of the U.S. Custom House. In 1970, the house was listed on the National Register of Historic Places, and in 1974 it was commemorated as a Historic Custom House by the U.S. Customs Service.

In 1998, the Galveston Historical Foundation entered into a public-private partnership with the Federal Government that allowed the Galveston Historical Foundation to lease the building from the GSA. Under this agreement, the Galveston Historical Foundation took responsibility for performing renovations on the U.S. Custom House. In 2008, the house was inundated with six feet of flood waters from Hurricane Ike. Fortunately, the Galveston Historical Foundation has been able to complete restoration of the first floor of the Custom House earlier this year.

Madam Speaker, by owning as opposed to leasing, the Galveston Historical Foundation will be able to improve this historical structure for future generations of Texans. It is difficult to think of a more appropriate owner for the U.S. Custom House than the Galveston Historical Foundation. Founded in 1954, the Galveston Historical Foundation is one of the Nation's largest local preservation organizations. Over the last 56 years, this foundation has expanded its mission to encompass community redevelopment, public education, historic preservation advocacy, maritime preservation and stewardship of historic properties. Today, the Galveston Historical Foundation has over 2,000 members representing individuals, families, and businesses across Texas, the U.S., and around the world.

The Galveston Historical Foundation's accomplishments include the redevelopment of The Strand; the rescue and restoration of the 1877 iron barque the ELISSA; the revitalization of historic residential neighborhoods and creation of historic districts; and the conception of signature events including Dickens on The Strand and the Galveston Historic Homes Tour.

The Galveston Historical Foundation has received numerous awards and honors. For example, they have twice received the National Trust for Historic Preservation's prestigious Honor Award. In 1991, the Galveston Historical Foundation was the first recipient of the Governor's Award for Excellence in Historic Preservation, and in 1995, received the National Trust's first ever award for organizational excellence. The American Institute of Architects has presented the foundation a Citation of Honor for its ongoing contribution to urban design and the quality of life in Galveston. In addition, the Association for Preservation Technology International honored the Galveston Historical Foundation with a Presidential Citation in 2004.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I once again congratulate the Galveston Historical Foundation for acquiring the U.S. Custom House, and I extend my thanks to the Galveston Historical Foundation for all they do to preserve Galveston's rich heritage.

CONGRESSIONAL RECOGNITION FOR JOSEPH BLAIR

HON. GABRIELLE GIFFORDS

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Ms. GIFFORDS. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize Joseph Blair, who is celebrating 10 years of unselfish service and dedication to hundreds of youth through his Arizona Basketball Academy.

For young people in my community, these camps are unique because they are provided at no cost to participants and are conducted by a former University of Arizona Wildcat basketball player who went on to play the game professionally.

Joseph Blair started his program by traveling to various Boys & Girls Club locations, sharing basketball and life skills. The sessions evolved and have been consolidated so they now also benefit teens from Tucson Parks & Recreation and the Tucson Urban League, among others.

The growth of Mr. Blair's altruistic donations of time, influence and funding are paralleled by his athletic endeavors. His global career as an international ambassador of basketball and good will was launched at the University of Arizona, where he was the 6-foot-10-inch "big man." As a Wildcat, he led the team to appearances at Madison Square Garden, the Great Alaskan Shoot-Out and the Maui Classic as well as games in Australia and in the 1994 NCAA Final Four.

Mr. Blair was picked in the second round of the 1996 NBA draft, but opted to pursue a career in Europe, playing in France, Greece, Turkey, Russia and as a member of the famed Harlem Globetrotters. Most of his international career was in Italy where Mr. Blair played in the mountains of Biella, the seashores of Pesaro and in the city of Milan. Mr. Blair is fluently bilingual and loved the rich culture of his adopted home.

While abroad, Mr. Blair earned numerous accolades and was named the Most Valuable Player of the Euroleague in 2003.

His understanding of how basketball can have a positive influence on young people has gone far beyond his own experiences on the court. His empathy for youth started during these years when Mr. Blair conducted basketball clinics in Greece and created a basketball academy in Italy.

Mr. Blair now is retired from basketball, but his philanthropic contributions continue. In addition to teaching athletic and life skills at his basketball academy, he is deeply involved with the Ronald McDonald House in Tucson where he and his staff provide and serve dinners for patients' families during the academy's week of camp.

At the end of his camp, Mr. Blair visits young patients in the pediatric unit of University Medical Center in Tucson, bringing smiles to them through gifts and an exhibition of his basketball skills.

Mr. Blair has worked and travelled in many other countries but has remained true to his roots. He is a living testimony of how to give back to one's community, not only as a big man, but as a man with a big heart.

I am proud to recognize Joseph Blair on the 10th anniversary of his Arizona Basketball Academy and I join with a grateful community to commend him for his valuable contributions to the young people of Tucson and Southern Arizona. Thank you Joseph for being such a great role model and for all that you do to help our youth develop their athletic and leadership skills.

INTRODUCING LEGISLATION FOR THE DISPLAY OF STATE AND TERRITORY FLAGS AT THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT

HON. ENI F.H. FALEOMAVAEGA

OF AMERICAN SAMOA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Madam Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation to ensure that the flags of the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Territories of the United States encircle the Washington Monument.

Standing at 555 feet and 5 1/8 inches tall, the Washington Monument is the most prominent structure in the nation's capital and is the world's tallest stone structure and the world's tallest obelisk. Completed in 1884, it memorializes the first President of the United States, President George Washington, who led our country to independence and helped shaped the role of the presidency and the course of our democracy in its early days. It was most fitting then that Congress in 1833 established the Washington National Monument Society to create a monument in honor of the Father of our Country.

Today, the Washington Monument serves as a reminder of the greatness of this Nation, as an object of pride to the American people and of admiration to all who see it.

The legislation I am proposing directs the U.S. National Park Service through the Secretary of Interior, to ensure that the flags of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and the Territories of the United States encircle the Washington Monument. As an object of pride to the American people, I think it is most fitting that the flags of all States, DC and U.S. Territories are flown at the Washington Monument.

Yesterday, we celebrated our national Flag Day by commemorating the adoption of the national flag of the United States as proclaimed by President Woodrow Wilson on June 14, 1916. As such, a public display of State and Territory flags at the Washington Monument will be an opportunity for each State and Territory to share its own uniqueness through its icons and figures representing the traditions, values, and local histories that collectively have made the United States.

Flags have always been a part of our history and traditions. This legislation will ensure that every American will be part of one of our great national treasures.

COMMENDING THE PATRIOT GUARD RIDERS

HON. JO ANN EMERSON

OF MISSOURI

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mrs. EMERSON. Madam Speaker, I rise today to commend the work of a distinguished group of veterans and volunteers who continue to serve the men and women of our military and their families. The Patriot Guard riders can be seen at nearly every event celebrating our long tradition of military service to the Nation in Missouri's Eighth Congressional District.

It is difficult to miss the Patriot Guard riders, with their motorcycles emitting a low rumble en route to a Memorial Day ceremony, a welcome home celebration, a Veterans Day event or a military funeral. Their presence is always a respectful tribute to those who serve in uniform, and they are frequently a comfort to the families who have lost loved ones in the course of duty.

The members of the Patriot Guard do every day something that too few Americans take time for: they are always, always available to our troops, our veterans and our military families. They mark the service of Americans who have left their homes and risked their lives to defend our freedoms.

In the U.S. House of Representatives, I think it is important and fitting to single out such examples of service to our country. With honor and with dignity, the Patriot Guard riders are a source of constant support to our servicemembers, past, present and future. They are also a source of inspiration to young Americans considering a future in the service of our Nation, and I am very proud to thank them for all their efforts.

RECOGNITION OF THE MUSICAL ACHIEVEMENTS OF LYNRYD SKYNYRD

HON. SPENCER BACHUS

OF ALABAMA

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mr. BACHUS. Madam Speaker, in the music world, it is challenging enough for a band to record one hit song, much less become a voice for an entire region and a true icon. That is why Congressman CONNIE MACK and I are pleased to jointly recognize the accomplishments and patriotic spirit of the legendary Lynryd Skynyrd.

From humble beginnings, Lynryd Skynyrd has become one of the most revered and accomplished bands in the history of music, having sold nearly 30 million records worldwide in the last four decades. Through their live performances and the music and songs still played on radio stations around the world every day, the members of Lynryd Skynyrd have established themselves as timeless artists who transcend any one musical era or generation.

As validated by their induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 2006, Lynryd Skynyrd has had a seminal impact on the development of rock and country music and a profound influence on the career development of many artists who followed in their creative footsteps.

Through their collective voices, the band has become a beacon for regional identity and pride in the American South. This is perhaps best epitomized by the song "Sweet Home Alabama," an anthem so universally identified with the State of Alabama that it is the official motto displayed on license plates.

Since their start in Jacksonville, Florida, in the late 1960s, Lynryd Skynyrd has been a spokesman for the everyday working man and woman, the friends and neighbors of their formative years. Their ability to capture a unique part of the American spirit has given their music emotional meaning to many fans and built a legacy that continues to grow year after year.

Amid triumph and loss, these sons of the South have evolved from band to close-knit family. A tragic airplane crash in 1977 claimed original members Steve Gaines, Cassie Gaines, and lead singer Ronnie Van Zant, but Ronnie's brother Johnny carried on the tradition as the new vocalist. Devoted fans also remember and cherish the contributions of Allen Collins, Leon Wilkeson, Billy Powell, and Ean Evans. Today, led by core members Johnny Van Zant, Gary Rossington, Rickey Medlock, and Michael Cartellone, Lynryd Skynyrd continues to share an unbreakable bond with the fans they count as family as well.

Lynryd Skynyrd has been a generous supporter of our men and women in the Armed Forces for many years. The band has long understood that our military personnel bravely and unselfishly stand guard over our everyday security and freedom. They have enthusiastically raised money for military families and played countless shows for our service members in uniform. Their song "Red, White, and Blue" was written as a tribute to the men and women who serve in the defense of freedom.

As representatives of timeless American values and champions of working class heroes, Lynryd Skynyrd continues to entertain and inspire millions of fans across the world. Along with Congressman MACK, I find it highly appropriate that the people's House takes time to recognize this classic band for lasting contributions not just to the world of music, but to American popular culture as a whole.

CHANCELLOR BERGLAND RETIREMENT

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Madam Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I stand before you today to honor Dr. Bruce Bergland and to wish him well upon his retirement from his position as Chancellor of Indiana University Northwest. Dr. Bergland's many years of service in the field of education have had a tremendous positive impact on numerous students and educators within the community of Northwest Indiana and across the nation. In honor of Chancellor Bruce Bergland, a retirement reception was held on Tuesday, June 15, 2010 at the Savannah Center located on the campus of Indiana University Northwest in Gary, Indiana.

Dr. Bruce Bergland's professional career began with his passion for education. His truly impressive resume reflects his many years of service in numerous capacities within the collegiate education field across the United States. Following his graduation in 1966 from Iowa University, where he received a Bachelor's degree in psychology, Bruce went on to pursue his doctoral degree in counseling at Stanford University. After graduating in 1970, Dr. Bergland took a position at Northwestern University and became the Assistant Professor of Education and Psychology. Bruce's career then led him to the University of Colorado at Denver, where he served in numerous capacities from 1972–1995. His many positions during his tenure included: Executive Vice Chancellor, Interim Dean, Vice Chancellor for Planning, and Associate Professor of Education. In 1995, Dr. Bergland decided to move on and became the Executive Vice Chancellor and Professor of Psychology at the University of Hawaii, West Oahu. Next, in 1997, Bruce's career led him to Trinity College in Vermont, where he served as the Vice President for Academic and Student Affairs, Professor of Basic and Applied Social Sciences, and Academic Dean.

Chancellor Bergland started his tenure as Chief Executive Officer at Indiana University Northwest (IUN) on July 1, 1999. Dr. Bergland's main goal from day one was to develop a "shared vision" for the university by reaching out to faculty and students, as well as community and business leaders, in order to develop a strong sense of the economic and cultural needs of IUN. Chancellor Bergland has successfully maintained this steering committee which provides a continuous effort for the future growth and development of the university. Among his many accomplishments at IUN, Bruce has also initiated the Diversity Programming Group, established the Office of Institutional Research and the Office of Contracts and Grants, initiated IUN's participation in the Academic Quality Improvement Process Accreditation, and established a new College of Health and Human Services.

Additionally, Bruce selflessly gives of his time to the community of Northwest Indiana and has been involved in the following civic activities: Northwest Indiana Quality of Life Council, South Shore Arts, Urban League of Northwest Indiana, Lake Area United Way, Boys and Girls Clubs of Northwest Indiana, Tradewinds, Gary Educational Development Foundation, Mayor's Hall of Fame Advisory Committee, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Northwest Indiana Empowerment Zone, Northwest Indiana Forum, and University Club.

Madam Speaker, I ask that you and my other distinguished colleagues join me in commending Chancellor Bruce Bergland for his lifetime of leadership, service, and dedication to the institution of education. He has touched the lives of countless students and educators, as well as many citizens of Northwest Indiana through his civic endeavors. For his true service and uncompromising dedication, Chancellor Bruce Bergland is worthy of the highest praise, and I ask that you join me in wishing him well upon his retirement.

THE SACRIFICES OF THE SPECIAL FORCES

HON. LARRY KISSELL

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mr. KISSELL. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor one of our Nation's greatest military resources, the Special Forces. These brave patriots routinely endure harsh conditions in very austere environments to defend our Nation's freedoms.

I was fortunate to have met Bert Caswell. Bert is a Congressional Visitor Center Tour Guide and has a heart for the military and our wounded warriors. Immediately after the terrorist attacks on September 11, 2001, Bert began using his gift of poetry to help comfort those who mourn.

Soon after, Bert decided to write poetry for the military and wounded warriors to commemorate their sacrifices.

I was particularly impressed with a poem he wrote in honor of the United States Special Forces. These quiet professionals live by the motto of "for, by, and through." They proudly serve at the point of the Nation's military operations conducting a wide range of missions in support of the country they love.

Today I ask my colleagues to recognize the tremendous sacrifices of America's Special Forces with Bert Caswell's poem.

IN LOVING MEMORY OF WILLIAM "BILL" ELKINS, JR.

HON. MAXINE WATERS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Ms. WATERS. Madam Speaker, I submit the following:

To Eleanor and Family,
 I am sorry that I cannot be with you at the home-going services of your dear husband, father, grandfather, and my good friend, Bill. I join with the many other elected officials and community leaders who mourn his loss. Bill Elkins was well known, respected, and loved by the many who knew, worked with and understood his undying commitment to African Americans in this city.

Bill spent the best part of his years in service to the late great Mayor Tom Bradley. He served as a liaison for Civil Rights Organizations, Ministers, Fraternities and Sororities and elected officials representing Mayor Bradley. Bill was all about equal opportunity and participation by all people. He truly was responsible for keeping the community informed and working closely with ministers helping them to their congregation engaged and helping to solve community problems.

I could share many stories on how we spent countless hours planning, strategizing, organizing and encouraging people to "Get Out the Vote". We don't see that kind of dedication anymore. But for those of us who were fortunate enough to work with him we learned what it meant to be truly committed to the community, he inspired us all.

Eleanor, your sisters in BWF, the organization that you helped to found, stand with at this difficult moment for you and your family. You and the family can rest assured that Bill did more than his share of service in this community. His work is recorded in the history of this city and now it is time for him to rest in peace. He will be sorely missed by so many.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE MARIAN MIDDLE SCHOOL

HON. RUSS CARNAHAN

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mr. CARNAHAN. Madam Speaker, I rise to acknowledge the 10th anniversary of Marian Middle School in St. Louis. Ten years ago, a group of Catholic sisters established Marian Middle School to provide a stable learning environment for economically disadvantaged girls in the St. Louis Public School District.

Marian strives to prepare girls in grades 5 through 8 for a college preparatory high school education. Marian Middle School is the only all-girl, private school environment available to students in the St. Louis region. This unique resource offers a learning experience that, just 10 years ago, was unavailable to middle-school-aged girls in St. Louis.

Marian Middle School has experienced strong growth since its founding. With a capacity of 80 students, Marian recently relocated to accommodate for its growing enrollment. Marian's resources have also expanded, allowing the school to offer numerous after-school enrichment programs and activities.

Marian strives to provide a challenging curriculum and a balanced range of extra-curricular opportunities. The 10-hour school day certainly challenges students, but it also allows Marian to achieve its goal of educating the whole person.

True to its call to assist the economically-disadvantaged, Marian determines tuition on a case-by-case basis. Tuition at Marian corresponds with the financial situation of the student's family. This method testifies to the generosity and sincerity of the mission of Marian Middle School.

Graduates of Marian Middle School currently attend 10 different college preparatory high schools in St. Louis. On the 10th anniversary of Marian, I think it is appropriate to pay tribute to a unique and successful academic institution.

COMMEMORATING THE 350TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE HOPKINS SCHOOL IN NEW HAVEN

HON. ROSA L. DeLAURO

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Ms. DeLAURO. Madam Speaker, I rise to commemorate the 350th anniversary of the Hopkins School, a co-educational preparatory day school in my hometown of New Haven, Connecticut and the third oldest independent school in the United States.

The rich history of Hopkins dates to well before the dawn of our American republic, when Governor Edward Hopkins of the young Colony of Connecticut established America's first charitable trust in 1650. In that trust, he set aside some of his estate for "the breeding up of hopeful youths for the public service of the country in future times." And so a one-room schoolhouse was built on New Haven Green bearing Hopkins name. From that seed, a fine educational institution has flourished.

In the centuries since, Hopkins has molded many Connecticut youths into fine public servants. Among the school's esteemed alumni are a signer of the United States Constitution, several noted engineers and prize-winning physicists, diplomats and industrialists, Governors, Senators, and more than a few presidents of Yale University.

To this day, from its home since 1926 on a hill overlooking New Haven, Hopkins still continues to mold our state's bright young minds into leaders and innovators. With an average class size of fourteen, an educational philosophy that prizes extracurricular activities, public service, and engaged citizenship in addition to the usual academic subjects, and an inclusive community that welcomes young men and women of all races, classes, ethnicities, and creeds, it is little wonder that Hopkins continually produces students that place among the top of the nation in standardized testing.

I congratulate Hopkins and its current Head, Barbara Riley, on three and a half centuries of academic achievement. And I salute the school's continuing service to the colony, state, and young people of Connecticut. Here is to the first 350, and here's to many more.

CELEBRATING LGBT PRIDE MONTH

HON. ALCEE L. HASTINGS

OF FLORIDA

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, just over 40 years ago, a police raid on a gay bar in Greenwich Village made history. The so-called Stonewall riots, during which members of the gay community openly challenged institutionalized homophobia, marked the beginning of the modern Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender, LGBT, rights movement and led to the formation of gay rights organizations across the United States and around the world. Each June, we commemorate this ongoing struggle for equality by celebrating LGBT Pride Month.

It is indeed a historic time for our nation and the American people. What should have happened 17 years ago is now closer to being a reality than ever before. By passing the Murphy Amendment along with the Defense Authorization bill, the House of Representatives has pledged to fulfill its promise of upholding the values for which the United States stands by allowing gay and lesbian Americans to serve openly in the military. As I have said time and again, the discriminatory law known as "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" should be repealed once and for all. It threatens our national security and costs us millions of dollars each year to kick out dedicated and highly-skilled service members and to retrain new ones.

As we celebrate this victory, we are reminded of the long battle that has brought us to this point. I would be terribly remiss if I did not acknowledge the hard work and sacrifices of the countless service members and veterans, many of whose lives have been negatively impacted by this bigoted policy, as well as those military and policy leaders, advocacy organizations, and everyday Americans who have taken a stand against discrimination.

I am also pleased that President Obama and his administration have taken meaningful steps toward achieving LGBT equality. Most recently, President Obama extended a wider range of benefits to the same-sex partners of federal employees, including key protections such as long-term care insurance, health insurance reimbursements, business travel accident insurance, and tax reimbursements for homeowner's insurance. In April, President Obama also mandated that all hospitals extend visitation rights to the partners of gay men and lesbians and that they respect patients' choices about who may make critical health care decisions for them.

More than ever before, the fight for LGBT equality is full of hope and promise. But, our work is far from over. The sad reality is that gay and lesbian Americans are still essentially second-class citizens, with different rights depending on where they work and the state in which they live. This nation can only truly prosper when all of its citizens are guaranteed equal protection under the law. Laws that deprive LGBT Americans of these rights are unconstitutional, discriminatory, and unconscionable. It is my sincere hope that Congress and our nation as a whole will work together to pass the Employment Non-Discrimination Act, ENDA, repeal the Defense of Marriage Act, DOMA, and lift the ban on men who have sex with men, MSM, donating blood.

Madam Speaker, the LGBT community is part of our American family. They are our friends and neighbors and all contribute to this great nation. We must ensure that the pages of history only continue to turn forward on equality for all Americans, regardless of sexual orientation, gender identity, or gender expression. This LGBT Pride Month, I reaffirm my resolve to achieve equal rights for LGBT Americans and nothing less. It is the right thing to do.

HONORING THE 58TH ANNIVERSARY OF LE BONHEUR CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL AND THE GRAND OPENING OF THEIR NEW FACILITY

HON. STEVE COHEN

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mr. COHEN. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize the 58th Anniversary of Le Bonheur Children's Hospital and the grand opening of their new, state-of-the-art facility in downtown Memphis, Tennessee. Located in the heart of the Memphis medical district, the new 255-bed hospital makes Le Bonheur the largest pediatric health-care facility in the state, serving over 130,000 children each year.

Since opening its doors on June 15, 1952, Le Bonheur Children's Hospital has long stood as a shining beacon of service to Memphis and the surrounding community, providing health care and emergency treatment to children of all ages from 95 counties in six states. Over the decades, the facility has established an international reputation as a leader in both pediatric research and clinical care while serving as one of the country's foremost teaching hospitals. Partnerships with other premier hospitals such as St. Jude Children's Research Hospital and the University of Tennessee Health Science Center have further solidified Le Bonheur's world-class standing.

In addition to serving the region's healthcare needs, Le Bonheur continues to serve as one of the largest employers in the Memphis area, providing jobs to over 2,000 medical professionals while supporting over 14,000 other jobs in the community through a combination of direct and indirect economic contributions. Furthermore, the construction of the new facility has provided on average 650 jobs each day since the February 2008 ground breaking. Moreover, the increased size of the campus itself will result in the creation of almost 100 new jobs over the next 12–24 months.

The grand opening of the new 12-story, 610,000-square-foot hospital marks an exciting new chapter in the life of Le Bonheur. The $340 million facility will provide the Le Bonheur staff with $20 million in new equipment and technology as well as nearly double the hospital's current space, significantly increasing the capacity for research, education, patient care, and family comforts such as more sleeping space for parents, playrooms, gathering areas and even a first-run movie theatre.

In keeping with their reputation as an exemplar in the Memphis area, Le Bonheur has striven to ensure that their new facility is as environmentally efficient as possible. The new building was constructed using recycled concrete and steel, incorporates native plants and employs water conservation methods such as drip watering and low-volume faucets and toilets. The hospital also offers numerous bike racks and has even set aside convenient parking spots reserved for energy-efficient vehicles.

For 58 years to the day, Le Bonheur Children's Hospital has always stood out as a paradigm of success and service in Memphis. I commend their steadfast efforts and dedication to the community, and recognize them for the credit and praise they so duly deserve.

CONGRATULATING COLONEL
BRADLEY D. SPACY

HON. STEVE AUSTRIA

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mr. AUSTRIA. Madam Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Colonel Bradley D. Spacy, for his outstanding service to our nation and the United States Air Force.

It is an honor to join the people of Ohio's Seventh Congressional District in congratulating Colonel Spacy upon his relinquishment of command as the Commander, 88th Air Base Wing, Air Force Materiel Command and Installation Commander, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio.

Colonel Spacy commands one of the largest air base wings in the United States Air Force, with more than 5,000 Air Force military, civilian, and contractor employees. The wing provides support and services to one of the largest, most diverse, and most organizationally complex bases in the Air Force including a major acquisition center, research and development laboratories, a major command headquarters, an airlift wing, and the world's largest military air museum. The base is home to more than 27,000 employees and is the largest single site employer in the state of Ohio.

Colonel Spacy developed the Operation Community Warfighter, an exercise deployment where community leaders could experience firsthand the intense ground operations our men and women in the Air Force face during real-world deployments. I can attest also to his solid reputation of hard work, dedication, loyalty, honor, courage, and pride.

For his strong dedication of service to our community, I join the people of Ohio's Seventh Congressional District in extending our best wishes upon his new assignment in Washington, DC, as the Senate liaison for the Air Force and wish him ongoing success in all future endeavors and in this new capacity. Ooorah!

OUR UNCONSCIONABLE NATIONAL DEBT

HON. MIKE COFFMAN

OF COLORADO

Tuesday, June 15, 2010

Mr. COFFMAN of Colorado. Madam Speaker, today our national debt is $13,046,148,615,770.79.

On January 6, 2009, the start of the 111th Congress, the national debt was $10,638,425,746,293.80.

This means the national debt has increased by $2,404,722,523,042.60 so far this Congress. The debt has increased $1,939,748,639.30 since just yesterday.

This debt and its interest payments we are passing to our children and all future Americans.

SENATE—Wednesday, June 16, 2010

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable TOM UDALL, a Senator from the State of New Mexico.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Barry C. Black, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

O God of infinite goodness, today empower our Senators to use their time, understanding, and talents to do what You desire. May this passion to serve You guide their thoughts, words, and work. Grant that they may not be too much lost in regret for the past but instead inspire them to do with their might the task which lies in their hands. Lord, strengthen them to fight the good fight, to finish the race, and to keep the faith. At the end of their journey, reward their faithfulness with a crown of righteousness and the harvest of work well done.

We pray in Your sacred Name. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable TOM UDALL led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, June 16, 2010.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable TOM UDALL, a Senator from the State of New Mexico, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, following leader remarks, there will be a period of morning business for 1 hour. Senators will be permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each at that time. Republicans will control the first 30 minutes and the majority will control the second 30 minutes.

Upon the conclusion of morning business, the Senate will resume consideration of the House message on H.R. 4213, the tax extenders legislation. There will be up to 5 minutes for debate on the Baucus amendment, with the time equally divided and controlled between Senators BAUCUS and GRASSLEY or their designees. The Senate will then proceed to vote on the motion to waive the Budget Act with respect to the Baucus amendment. Senators should expect additional votes this afternoon in relation to amendments to the tax extenders bill. Senators will be notified when any additional votes are scheduled.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republican leader is recognized.

NEEDING PRACTICAL SOLUTIONS

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, last night the President provided more detail on his administration's efforts to stop the oilspill in the gulf. If implemented successfully, some of what he said was encouraging. However, I wish the President would have used this opportunity to focus entirely on stopping the spill and to cleaning it up instead of using this crisis as an opportunity to push for a new national energy tax.

The immediate issue here is a broken pipe that has been spewing hundreds of thousands of gallons of oil a day into the ocean for more than 8 weeks. The fact that the White House wants to use this crisis as an excuse to push more of its legislative agenda on the American people—with the same kinds of arguments it used to push health care—is really nothing short of startling.

During the health care debate, Americans were told we couldn't afford to put off the administration's vision of government-driven reform. Health care costs were rising so quickly, the President said, that inaction was not an option. We heard the same thing last night. It is a recurring theme out of this White House.

In the middle of a jobs crisis, Americans were told they needed to spend nearly $1 trillion on longstanding Democratic priorities that Democrats called a stimulus bill. They passed it, and we lost another 3 million jobs.

Out-of-control health care costs are pricing people out of the market and threatening to bankrupt government, so they passed a massive government-driven health care bill that promises to send health care costs even higher than they already are.

Our financial crisis was caused in large part by recklessness at government-sponsored entities such as Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, and their solution to that crisis was to pass a massive government intrusion into Main Street without even addressing Fannie or Freddie.

Now, in the midst of the worst environmental catastrophe in American history, they are talking about a new national energy task to achieve their ideological goal of passing global warming legislation. Americans are pleading with the administration to fix the immediate problem in the gulf and the White House wants to give us a new national energy tax instead.

Every time we face a crisis, it seems this administration takes us on another ideological tour of the far left's to-do list, when all the American people want from it are some straightforward, practical solutions.

So the White House may view the oilspill as an opportunity to push its agenda here in Washington, but Americans are more concerned about what it plans to do to solve the crisis down in the gulf. Americans have had enough of this crisis rhetoric coming out of this White House. They want real answers to real problems. And it doesn't get more real than the problem in the gulf.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will be a period of morning business for 1 hour, with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each and with the time equally divided and controlled between the two leaders or their designees, with the Republicans controlling the first half and the majority controlling the final half.

The Senator from Illinois.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I see no one on the floor on the Republican side. If there is no objection, I would like to speak as in morning business, and I will yield as soon as a Republican Senator comes to the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GULF OILSPILL

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, last night the President of the United States addressed one of the toughest issues any President has ever had to face. This is an environmental disaster of historic magnitude. It is one that could not have been anticipated. We have never had anything quite like it—at least near the United States. It is certainly one the President and our government did everything they could do to respond, but this frustrating situation continues.

What the President reminded us of last night is that we need to coordinate every effort, but understand that, in the end, there is no U.S. department of deep sea drilling. What it comes down to is that we need to turn to the private sector, which has the resources, the expertise, and the capability of not only dealing with the continuing oil-spill in the Gulf of Mexico but the aftermath as well.

It has been clear from the outset that this President has been very firm and resolute that British Petroleum, this oil company, is going to be held responsible for the damage that has been done. It will be at their expense, and not at the expense of American taxpayers, that we will help the businesses affected and do anything within our power to restore the devastation which has occurred to the environment.

It was interesting yesterday that in testimony before the House of Representatives, many of the leaders of the major oil companies that compete with BP were as forthright publicly as they have been privately in other conversations. They made it clear that many of the activities engaged in by BP were inconsistent with the highest standards of their industry. They made it clear that when it came to this blow-out preventer, which should have stopped the flow of oil, it was inadequate. It hasn't been tested. It was not the kind of technology that had redundancy built in so that there would be some peace of mind and understanding that in the event of a rig disaster, it would work. It failed, and it failed in a situation which has caused more environmental damage in our country than we have ever seen from one occurrence.

I saw 21 years ago what happened in the Prince William Sound of Alaska, and I can tell you that more than two decades later, they are still suffering—suffering from lawsuits against the Exxon oil company, which unfortunately were ruled against the plaintiffs; suffering from environmental damage which will continue at least indefinitely.

What we have in the situation in the gulf is different. We have an admission by BP that they are at fault and an acceptance of responsibility for what they characterize as legitimate claims. I think it is proper—and many of us in the Senate joined majority leader HARRY REID in making the request—that BP set aside some $20 billion in an escrow fund, a trust fund that will be available to pay for these damages. It troubles me that this company is talking about declaring a dividend and paying out billions of dollars to its shareholders when, frankly, we don't know what the ultimate cost is going to be of the cleanup in the Gulf of Mexico. I want to be certain BP continues in business and meets its responsibility, that it sets aside the funds necessary to protect our Nation from the damage it has caused.

I also believe we need to increase the responsibility of oil companies when it comes to future drilling. Right now, there is a tax on each barrel of oil of 8 cents—8 cents. A barrel of oil is now selling for about $75. So 8 cents on each barrel is paid by an oil company into an oilspill liability fund. That has generated a little over $1 billion in the event that we run into a disaster which needs to be taken care of. In the BP circumstance, the company is assuming liability. But tomorrow, God forbid, if another tragedy occurs with a company that doesn't have BP's resources, it will be this oilspill liability fund that will be called on to repair the damage, and $1 billion is not enough. Eight cents a barrel is not enough.

Before the Senate today is an extenders bill which will increase the amount per barrel to 41 cents. This will be gathered together over time from the oil producers and the oil industry into an insurance fund, a basic oilspill insurance fund. I think that is only reasonable. The bill also increases the liability cap of companies under this oilspill liability to $5 billion. Currently, it is $1 billion. So both of these items are in our bill in an effort to hold the major oil companies accountable for any future disasters and to protect the taxpayers from paying out-of-pocket or paying out of the Treasury for any of these costs.

What is interesting is that the Republicans are going to come forward with a substitute brought on by JOHN THUNE, who is a Senator from South Dakota. The Republican substitute eliminates the increase in the tax on a barrel of oil for the oilspill liability fund. Of course, the big oil companies don't want to pay it, and this elimination of the tax is certainly on their agenda. It is unfortunate that Republican Senators are going to come forward and propose this. We need this money in the oilspill liability fund. To have a situation where this money is not being collected leaves us vulnerable in terms of future disasters where the taxpayers will be picking up the bill.

There is a provision in the Thune amendment, the Republican substitute, which eliminates the provision in our bill relating to the Tax Code when it comes to American companies shipping jobs overseas. Most of us believe that if we are going to get out of this recession, we need to strengthen American businesses and certainly hire more people in the United States, pay them a decent wage, and bring them back to work and out of the ranks of the unemployed.

At this point in time, many American companies are locating production facilities overseas because of perverse incentives which we have created in our Tax Code. The bill brought to the floor eliminates many of these incentives—eliminates the tax loopholes companies are using to be more profitable by locating overseas. So the Thune amendment, the Republican substitute amendment, comes forward and says: We don't want to do that. We want to leave in the Tax Code—according to the Republicans—those provisions which create incentives to ship American jobs overseas. That makes no sense to me.

Last night I attended a meeting of the deficit commission, to which I was appointed by Senator REID. There was an economist there who tried to make the argument that allowing businesses in the United States—and giving them incentives, incidentally—to locate and produce overseas was good for the American economy. He argued if they could produce more overseas, it would ultimately mean they would be more profitable and produce more jobs in the United States.

I told him if that logic applied, then we ought to have a record number of manufacturing jobs because, over the last 20 years, more and more American businesses have moved production facilities offshore, overseas.

Instead, the opposite is true. In my State and in Michigan, all across the United States we have seen manufacturing jobs declining dramatically while production facilities have been sent overseas. This theory that is obviously behind the Republican Thune substitute is that we ought to reward American companies for locating and producing overseas. I do not agree with that. I hope we will oppose the Thune substitute and we will move as soon as we can to deal with the situation where we have increased jobs here in the United States to deal with this recession.

I understand we are going to have speakers later on in the Democratic side and I want to reserve time for those speakers. I reserve the remainder of time on the Democratic side, and if there is no one here to speak on the Republican side, I will yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

Is it my understanding that the time will be taken from the Republican side at this point?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection.

Mr. DURBIN. I believe the Republicans, if I am not mistaken, under the unanimous consent were first in morning business.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum, with the understanding the time that runs now will come from the time previously allotted to the Republican side.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. President, could you please let me know when I have consumed 10 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will do so.

MISSED OPPORTUNITY

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. President, all of us watched the President's remarks last night. It is rare for a President to make a speech from the Oval Office. President Reagan did it with the Challenger tragedy. President George W. Bush, spoke about 9/11. I thought the President was right to focus on what the government is doing to clean up the oil spill, and what we are doing to help those who are hurt. I think he missed an opportunity, though, in terms of looking to the energy future.

He mentioned the climate bill. Of course that is House passed cap-and-trade bill which doesn't have enough support to pass the Senate. He mentioned windmills and solar panels, which have nothing to do with reducing our dependence on foreign oil. I thought the missed opportunity was the President could have announced a mini-Manhattan Project to reduce our dependence on foreign oil by electrifying half our cars and trucks, which we could do without building any new powerplants by plugging them in at night. The President is in favor of that. Secretary Chu is a leader in it. In a bipartisan way we support that goal. All 41 Republican Senators support electrifying our cars and trucks. Senator DORGAN, Senator MERKLEY, and I support legislation for that. He could have talked about that.

A second part of the clean energy future could have been creating the environment to build 100 new nuclear power plants. The President has taken some impressive steps to create a better environment for nuclear power. All 41 Republican Senators support that. That would be for clean electricity, not for fuel, but it would be a clean energy future.

Third, the President could have focused on mini-Manhattan Projects for energy research and development, such as reducing the cost of solar power by a factor of 4; recapturing carbon from coal plants; trying to invent a 500-mile battery, which would have made sure that we electrify a significant part of our cars and trucks in America; recycling used nuclear fuel; and biofuels—all 41 Republican Senators support the goal of doubling energy research and development. So does the President. So those are three steps toward clean energy independence that we agree on.

He mentioned windmills and solar panels, which have nothing to do with reducing our dependence on foreign oil—those are for electricity, not fuel. They are puny amounts of electricity, in any event. If he would stick with the things that we and he agree on, he could have used that speech for an important step forward for our country. In that sense, I think it was a missed opportunity.

This past weekend the President sent a letter to Congress urging us to approve $50 billion in emergency aid to State and local governments. I want to speak about that today from the vantage point I have as a former Governor and former U.S. Secretary of Education. According to the Wall Street Journal on Monday, the letter said budget cuts at State and local levels were leading to massive layoffs of teachers, policemen, and firefighters.

The two points I want to make are that, No. 1, we here in Washington—I tried not to, but the majority did—created this financial cliff over which the States are about to run. And, No. 2, when it comes to the question of $23 billion for teachers, I think we need to ask, where is the money going to go? And from whose schoolchildren are we going to borrow it? Because right now we do not have extra money lying around in Washington, DC. We have a great big problem with spending and debt.

Let me start with what I said first, which is that we in Washington have created this financial cliff over which State Governors are running. As we were debating the health care bill I said, not really in jest, that everybody who votes for it ought to be forced to go home and serve as Governor of their State under the new rules.

Take Tennessee, for example. We were very fortunate that our State was one of the two winners in the Race to the Top education plan. Give credit to the Governor and teachers in the State. Tennessee will get a half billion dollars as a result of it. Yet, according to our Governor, the health care bill will take away more than twice as much during the same period of time by imposing $1.1 billion in new Medicaid costs on the State between 2014 and 2019. So we are causing problems for the State that caused the layoffs.

Let me not ask you to take my word for it. Here is a January op-ed from the Wall Street Journal by the Democratic Lieutenant Governor of New York, Mr. Ravitch, who says the Federal stimulus, which Congress passed at the beginning of 2009:

... has provided significant budget relief to the states. . . .

He approved of that.

but this relief is temporary and makes it harder for States to cut expenditures. In major areas such as transportation, education and health care, stimulus funds come with strings attached. These strings prevent States from substituting federal money for state funds, require states to spend minimum amounts of their own funds, and prevent states from tightening eligibility standards for benefits.

Lieutenant Governor Ravitch goes on to say:

Because of these requirements, states, instead of cutting spending in transportation, education and health care, have been forced to keep most of their expenditures at previous levels. . . .

We did that. Congress did that.

... and use federal funds only as supplements. The net result is this: The federal stimulus has led States to increase overall spending in these core areas, which in effect has only raised the height of the cliff from which state spending will fall if stimulus funds evaporate.

That is the Lieutenant Governor of New York talking about the evaporation of stimulus funds which comes at the end of this year and he is saying we made it harder for States to pay their bills. At the time the stimulus package was passed, everyone said it was one-time funding. All of us knew that Medicaid costs were overwhelming the States. Still, Congress went ahead—the majority, in any event—and increased the federal match for Medicaid, and required States not to change eligibility requirements. Thus they created this financial cliff at the end of the year which will cause the States' share for Medicaid spending to increase from an average of 34 percent to 43 percent, a net increase of $39 billion in costs for 2011. We are getting close to the $50 billion we are being asked to bail States out for.

Let me say a word about teacher salaries. The first question is, where is the rest of the money going to go? The request, as it has been talked about, says this will save 100,000, maybe 300,000 teacher jobs. We are supposed to appropriate $23 billion for that purpose.

At $100,000 that works out to about $230,000 per teacher job saved. If we are saving 300,000 teacher jobs with that $23 billion, that works out to $76,667 per teacher job saved. The average national teacher's salary is $46,752. Where does the rest of the money go?

At the beginning of this administration there was a huge increase in education funds; $97 billion over 2 years for elementary and secondary education and $53.6 billion for the State Fiscal Stabilization fund. We were assured this was one-time funding. In April 2009, the Department of Education itself said in its guidance to the States on how to spend the money:

The [funds are] expected to be a one-time infusion of substantial new resources. These funds should be invested in ways that do not result in unsustainable continuing commitments after the funding expires.

What we could have said is, we don't have any more money either, States. We just print it up here. So don't expect us to send you anymore.

The U.S. Department of Education helpfully suggested what some of those one-time expenditures might be—making improvements in teacher effectiveness; establishing pre-K-to-college-and-career data systems; making progress toward rigorous college- and career-ready standards; providing targeted, selective support; and effective interventions for the lowest performing schools. In other words, the States and schools were told: Don't spend this money on continuing programs. Spend it once.

Our Governor, a Democratic Governor in Tennessee, got the message. Governor Bredesen said in his State of the Union Address in 2009:

Please let me make it clear that no proposed version of the stimulus is any panacea or silver bullet; substantial cuts are still needed under any circumstances. Furthermore, it is vital to remember that this stimulus money is one-time funding.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The 10 minutes of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank the Chair. I see none of my colleagues here.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senator BARRASSO from Wyoming is waiting.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I ask for another 60 seconds to conclude my remarks. I thank the Chair.

When we think about the funding, we need to remember the best things for us to do. They are to stop imposing health care mandates on States, which make it impossible for them to pay their bills; and to properly support public education, especially public higher education, which is going to take a terrible blow because of the passage of the health care bill. Thanks to the health care bill, tuition payments for students are going to rise.

Second, we should recognize that the stimulus money passed last year was one-time funding. We created this financial cliff and now we have an unprecedented level of debt in the Federal Government. We do not have $23 billion lying around to send to the States.

Whether we are sending $230,000 per teaching job, $76,000 per teaching job, or scaling it back and saying we are only going to send the national average, which is $46,000, the question still remains: From whose grandchildren will we borrow the money?

We need to reduce the growth of the Federal debt. We should not be bailing out States with another $50 billion.

I thank the Senator from Wyoming and I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. BARRASSO. Mr. President, could you please inform me how much time is remaining in morning business?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is 17 minutes on the Republican side.

HEALTH CARE

Mr. BARRASSO. Mr. President, I come to the floor today as someone who has practiced medicine in the State of Wyoming since 1983, taking care of families across the great State of Wyoming as an orthopedic surgeon and also as a medical director of the Wyoming Health Care, which is a program to offer low-cost medical screenings, health screenings to help people; early detection, because we know that is a way to keep down the cost of care—to help them find problems before they get too far progressed so we can get effective treatments.

This is a very successful program. Often doctors are asked for their opinions on issues. Then, if a patient has a question, they ask for a second opinion from a second physician.

Well, I come to the floor today to offer my second opinion on this health care bill. I have been doing this week after week, as we have had a year-long debate and discussion about the health care bill that has now been signed into law. I come to the floor because it seems that every week, every week since the bill became law, there has been a new revelation, a new unintended consequence that the people of America look at and say: This is a bill, now a law, that was not passed for me. It is to help someone else.

The promises the American people heard when the bill was being debated and discussed, we are now finding that those promises have been broken. Again this week one of those major promises, fundamental behind the health care law, has been broken. The American people are concerned and distressed because it affects them personally. They believe they were misled.

The goal of the health care legislation last year was to lower the cost of health care. There is agreement all across the country we need to do that; we need to lower the cost of care, to improve quality of care. Absolutely. It is in the best interest of all Americans if we can improve the quality of care; then, of course, to increase access to care. The more we can do to allow more people in this country to have access to care, the better it is.

Lower cost, improved quality, improved access. Well, that is not what this Senate Chamber passed because I believe the bill that was passed is clearly not going to lower cost, and the Congressional Budget Office agrees. It is not going to improve quality, and it is not going to improve access, as we see from statements from the Secretary of Health and Human Services about the shortage of primary care providers, the shortage of physicians and nurse practitioners and others to help. So I continue to believe the law we now have passed is bad for patients, bad for payers, the people who are going to pay the health care bill of this country, and bad for providers, the nurses and doctors who take care of those patients.

I believe the bill fundamentally is going to result in higher costs for patients, less access for care, and unsustainable spending. The Speaker of the House, NANCY PELOSI, said: You are going to have to first pass the bill to find out what is in it. Once again, this past week, we have learned about something new that is in the health care law that many Americans have found surprising.

I would like to contrast a speech President Obama gave 1 year ago this week, 1 year ago yesterday, at the American Medical Association meeting in Chicago. I would like to quote from the speech given by the President, and then contrast it to regulations that have been sent out earlier this week. What a difference a year makes. President Obama said:

So let me begin by saying this—

This was a year ago—

I know that there are millions of Americans who are content with their health care coverage. They like their plan and they value their relationship with their doctor.

He went on to say:

And that means that no matter how we reform health care we will keep this promise. If you like your doctor, you will be able to keep your doctor. Period.

He went on to say:

If you like your health care plan, you will be able to keep your health care plan. Period. No one will take it away no matter what.

Well, those are very reassuring words to the 170 million people in this country who get their health insurance coverage through their employer at work. There were 170 million people reassured 1 year ago by the words of the President of the United States that if they like what they have, they can keep it.

This is the line that the President has continued to repeat. Most recently he gave the same reassurance to the senior citizens of this country in a townhall meeting he had just a little over a week ago. But what we are seeing now, instead of allowing Americans to keep their doctors and their health care plans, is another broken promise, a broken promise to the American people.

On Friday of last week, the Associated Press reported that 51 percent, over half of all Americans, a majority of those 170 million who get their health insurance through work, will no longer necessarily be able to keep the health insurance they have.

In the 25 years or so that I have practiced medicine, I know how important it is, having worked with patients, worked with people, what happens when they lose the coverage or have to change their coverage. It is very distressing. Sometimes it can be disorienting to them as they learn what new coverage they have, what they lost. So people who felt reassured last year by the President's comments are now in a situation where 51 percent of them are going to lose the coverage they have.

The Washington Post this week, Tuesday, June 15: The administration estimated that by 2013, health plans covering as many as 69 percent of employees could lose protected status. For small employers, the small businesses of this country, the total could be as high as 80 percent.

I mean, could that really be true? I find it astonishing. We have had calls to our office: Is that really true? We have talked to patients and people that I have taken care of because I have been back in Wyoming this past weekend and ran into a number of former patients of mine. They said: Is that really going to happen?

Let's see what the rules are that came out. These are the rules that came out on Monday. I mean, it is interesting to get rules on health care, and what are the first two lines? Department of the Treasury. Internal Revenue Service.

The Internal Revenue Service is writing the rules and regulations dealing with the health care bill. It goes on with the Department of Labor, the Department of Health and Human Services. This is titled, "Interim Final Rules For Group Health Plans And Health Insurance Coverage."

This is 121 pages. I am not going to go through all of it, but I would like to call your attention to page 54. On page 54 there is a table, and the table is called "Estimates of the Cumulative Percentage of Employer Plans Relinquishing," having to give up, "Their Grandfathered Status."

What it means is the percentage of employer plans of people who have the insurance they like they are not going to be able to keep.

They have a low-end estimate, a mid-range estimate and a high-end estimate of all of the employer plans in the country. It covers 170 million Americans. It says by the year 2013, just a few years from now, 51 percent, 51 percent of Americans will lose what they have now. It talks about the high estimate for the small employer plans, 80 percent.

So how can that be true? So 80 percent of small employers—that is the lifeblood of our economy, and we are at a point in this country where we have unemployment at 9.7 percent, and small business is the engine, the engine that grows the economy. Seventy percent of all new jobs in this country are created by small businesses. Yet for people who work in small businesses, it looks like up to 80 percent of them, over the next couple of years, are not going to be able to keep the health insurance they have now.

Why? Because the rules and regulations that have come out related to the law that has now been passed, in spite of the President's promise right here behind us—you will be able to keep your doctor, period; you will be able to keep your health care plan, period—the American people are finding that those words, those words, are not being held out in what was passed into law and the regulations that have now been written.

Headline, Wednesday, June 16, today, national newspaper: "So much for 'Keeping Your Plan.'"

Now, actually there are some people who can keep their plans—very few.

Headline, "Union Contract Can Exempt Plans From ObamaCare." So you do not get to necessarily keep your plan, it says, unless a union negotiated your coverage. The administration has granted a special exemption to those, and apparently only those, health care plans, a special exemption offered by the administration, according to this article, for those whose plans have been negotiated by the unions.

You do not have to go very far. All you need to do is open a newspaper. This is on Capitol Hill just the other day, Tuesday, June 8. It says, talking about health care, there is a picture of a doctor with an eye chart: "Comprehensive, but Not for All."

"Health reform ban on annual limits may end up hurting lower wage workers." Well, I thought that the whole idea behind this was to help additional workers, to help additional workers get coverage, get care. First paragraph:

Part of the health care overhaul due to kick in this September, could end up stripping more than a million people of their insurance coverage, violating a key goal of President Barack Obama's reforms.

There it is in black and white: "Violating a key goal of President Barack Obama's reforms." These are identifiable victims of ObamaCare, losers under ObamaCare. Promises made and promises broken.

What about the President's promise on the cost of care, bending the cost curve down? Well, yesterday, in The Hill:

Report projects a rise of 9 percent in employers' health costs in 2011.

But was it not Obama who said his legislation was going to actually allow Americans to have a lowering of their premiums by $2,500 per year per family? Well, how does that work with the projected rise in cost? So, once again, the American people heard one thing and now they are being delivered something very different.

That is why I come to the Senate floor today—to say it is time to repeal this legislation and replace it, replace this legislation with legislation that delivers more personal responsibility and more opportunities for individual patients, a patient-centered health care bill, a bill that allows Americans to buy insurance across State lines. We need a bill that will give more competition and will allow the costs to come down, that gives people who own their own health insurance an opportunity to get the same tax relief big companies get. That is important. That will help people.

How about a bill that includes a provision to give individual incentives to people who take responsibility for their own health care and their own health, do things like the people who come to the Wyoming Health Fairs, early detection, early treatment.

We know, and I have seen this in my years of practicing medicine, about half of all of the money we spend in this country on health care is on just 5 percent of the people. If we can focus on those 5 percent and help them with healthy lifestyles and good choices, we can get down the cost of their care.

Then we need a bill that deals with lawsuit abuse. That will help lower the amount of defensive medicine practiced and help lower the cost of care, plus one that allows small businesses to join together and then shop much more effectually to buy a lower cost health insurance plan.

Well, you can imagine what is happening right now in small businesses across America, as I have just brought to the attention of the Senate. When 80 percent, up to 80 percent of people with small business health plans who are getting their insurance that way, according to the new regulations put out by the Internal Revenue Service, as well as the Department of Health and Human Services, up to 80 percent are not going to be able to keep the coverage they now have and now enjoy under their current plans come the year 2013.

Those are the things that will make a difference. That is why I come to the floor today. I offer my second opinion about health care law, and now it is the law that I think is going to end up—and the American people understand this, and they see through it—is going to end up being bad for patients who need care, bad for payers, people paying for their health care costs, and the taxpayers of this country, as well as bad for providers, the nurses and the doctors and the hospitals who take care of those patients.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

NOMINATION OF ELENA KAGAN

Ms. KLOBUCHAR. Mr. President, I am pleased to come to the floor today with a few of my women colleagues to discuss the President's nomination of Solicitor General Elena Kagan to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. I am a member of the Judiciary Committee. We are looking forward to the hearings coming up in a few weeks. We hope the country is watching because this is a very important job and Ms. Kagan is a very impressive person.

With that, I turn to the Senator from Michigan, Ms. STABENOW.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan is recognized.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Minnesota.

We are here to talk about President Obama's nomination of Elena Kagan. I will come to the floor at a later point to respond to my friend from Wyoming with a different view about health care reform. We have a vote in just a few moments, a very important vote as to whether to support the ability of States, in these difficult times, to be able to continue health care for people who are out of work and for seniors who are in nursing homes, low-income seniors who find themselves caught in the economic crunch. In Michigan, there are 6 individuals out of every 100 who are on Medicaid now or who need to be on Medicaid. The upcoming vote will determine whether we place a value on health care, place a value on seniors in nursing homes and people who, because they have lost a job or because of some other situation in this economy, find themselves without health care. I hope colleagues who express concern about people having access to health care will join us in voting yes.

I thank the Senator from Minnesota for organizing and bringing us to the floor. I join her in speaking in favor of the President's nomination of Elena Kagan to be the next Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court.

She grew up in a family like so many in Michigan, with parents who worked hard for a living so they could provide for their children. Her mom was a teacher. Her dad was a tenants lawyer in New York City. She saw firsthand the effects of laws and court decisions on the everyday lives of Americans. Throughout her distinguished career, she has brought the lessons she learned from her parents—in her words, “service, character and integrity”—to every role she has had.

She took those lessons with her to the White House, where she worked with Democrats and Republicans to forge commonsense solutions to issues such as restricting tobacco companies from targeting ads to children.

She took those lessons with her to Harvard, where she became a successful and beloved professor. As dean, she worked to engage her students in service and to honor those who have served. Every year, she invited all of the military veterans on campus to her home for a Veterans Day dinner. She reached out to students from all across the political spectrum and proved to them one-on-one that she was a smart and pragmatic leader. Very conservative law students at Harvard tend to join the Federalist Society, while progressive law students are more likely to join the American Constitution Society. The two groups disagree on almost everything. Yet both groups sent letters to the Judiciary Committee supporting Elena Kagan's nomination as Solicitor General. That is rare in politics and is proof that Elena Kagan is respected for her fairness and impartiality.

Besides her parents, perhaps the biggest influence in her life was her one-time boss and mentor Justice Thurgood Marshall, who was also the Solicitor General before becoming a Supreme Court Justice. She admired his ability, in her words, to understand the way law works “in practice, as well as in the books—of the way in which law acted on people's lives.”

In private practice, Elena Kagan represented clients in litigation. Today, she represents all of us as the people's lawyer, the Solicitor General of the United States. Her job every day is to represent her clients, the people of our great country, before the U.S. Supreme Court. As a Justice, she will continue to represent the people. That is why I urge my colleagues today to join with us in confirming her nomination without delay.

I thank the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized.

Mrs. SHAHEEN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues, Senators STABENOW and KLOBUCHAR, in supporting the nomination of Elena Kagan to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. However, before addressing the nomination of Elena Kagan, I wish to echo the remarks of Senator STABENOW about the need to look at the legislation that is going to come before us in a few minutes.

My colleague, Senator BARRASSO, talked about wanting to help those people who are most in need of health care. One of the best ways we can do that is to pass the legislation pending before this body which includes an extension of Medicaid benefits, which is so important to States and to the people who are most in need, who have the least ability to get health care. I hope that as our colleagues are thinking about how they can support health care for Americans, they will support this legislation and make sure we extend Medicaid benefits for people throughout the States.

Turning to the Elena Kagan nomination, I am extremely pleased that President Obama has selected a woman with such impressive and unique credentials to serve on the Nation's highest Court. I had the good fortune to meet Solicitor General Kagan a number of years ago when both of us were at Harvard. I was at the Kennedy School as the director of its Institute of Politics, and she had just become dean of the Harvard Law School. It didn't take her very long to get a reputation here as someone who was loved by the students and the faculty, who was able to get everyone to work together. It comes as no surprise to me that she has continued her impressive accomplishments.

My favorable impression of Elena Kagan was confirmed after a recent meeting with her in my Senate office, spending more time really looking at what her record has been with the law. I wish to focus my remarks this morning on Elena Kagan's record that has prepared her to be a Justice.

A number of my colleagues from across the aisle have implied or stated directly that the Solicitor General lacks sufficient range of professional experience. A number of Senators are concerned that Elena Kagan does not have judicial experience. To address this point, it is worth noting that 41 of the Court's 111 Justices have joined the Court without any previous experience as a judge. Among these 41 are some of the most notable jurists of the last century: Justices Louis Brandeis, Felix Frankfurter, William Douglas, Byron White, and Lewis Powell. Chief Justices Harlan Stone, Earl Warren, and William Rehnquist were also chosen for the Court without prior judicial experience. The Presidents who nominated these Justices and the Senators who confirmed them were right to recognize that experiences other than being a judge can prepare one to serve on the Supreme Court with distinction. Elena Kagan certainly has had that experience. She has traveled a path of extraordinary accomplishment. I am confident she will continue that trend once she is elevated to the bench.

With more than 24 years of legal experience in a range of settings, she will bring a distinct perspective to judging that will serve both the Court and Americans well. Without a doubt, Ms. Kagan has been a lifelong student of the Supreme Court. As we heard from Senator STABENOW, she began her career as a clerk in the chambers of two highly regard jurists, including the legendary Thurgood Marshall. These formative years early in Ms. Kagan's career instilled in her an appreciation of the impact of judicial decisions on people and gave her an ability to zero in on critical facts and issues in cases.

After 3 years in private practice in Washington, Ms. Kagan became a professor of law at the University of Chicago. She focused there on scholarship and constitutional law, particularly the first amendment. She quickly became known as a powerful advocate for individual constitutional rights.

She served as an Associate White House Counsel and later Deputy Director of the Domestic Policy Council during the Clinton White House. These positions forced Elena Kagan to tackle difficult public policy matters while analyzing the limits of executive branch power.

Later, as dean of the Harvard Law School, Ms. Kagan is credited with making immense progress toward uniting a fractious faculty of very powerful opinions and intellects. She built bridges across academic and political groups.

A recent letter from the deans of law schools across the country describes Ms. Kagan as “a superb and successful dean” who “revealed a strong and consistent aptitude for forging coalitions that achieved smart and sensible solutions, often in the face of insoluble conflict.”

Harvard professor Charles Fried captured the thoughts of many of Ms. Kagan’s Harvard colleagues when he described her as someone who had a “masterful” ability to work well with diverse faculty.

Ms. Kagan’s intellect and work ethic caught the attention of President Obama when she was tapped to serve as Solicitor General. She is the first woman to hold this position which is often referred to as the 10th Justice of the Court. During her tenure, Solicitor General Kagan has filed 66 briefs and has argued numerous times before the Court. I can’t imagine better training for a position on the Court than the experience gained by a Solicitor General. Elena Kagan has publicly demonstrated her ability to critically analyze the law and advocate forcefully at the level demanded by our Nation’s highest Court.

Elena Kagan has dedicated her life to legal study. She has excelled as a clerk, a teacher, administrator, counsel, and advocate. I know these experiences have given her a full understanding and appreciation of the Supreme Court’s role in our democracy. Elena Kagan has built a career that shows she has the technical skills, the intellectual aptitude, and the personal judgment to be an extremely effective Justice. I look forward to the swift confirmation of a very impressive individual and urge all of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support her nomination.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

Ms. KLOBUCHAR. Mr. President, I thank my two colleagues, Senators

SHAHEEN and STABENOW, for joining me in making open arguments in favor of Solicitor General Kagan to be the next Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. If Members listened to Senator SHAHEEN’s discussion of the experience of Elena Kagan, something quickly emerged: she has always been on the front line and has not been afraid to get into battle. She is the one who had to go before the Supreme Court and argue the Citizens United Case that basically came up with a ruling from the current Supreme Court with which I don’t agree. The Supreme Court went beyond their bounds in how they interpreted election law, reversing decades of precedent. Yet it was Elena Kagan who was the one willing to stand there as Solicitor General and basically say corporations are not people; people are people.

I like the thought of someone of her experience—such as intellectual heavy-weight—getting on the Court to basically match Justice Roberts.

As Senator SHAHEEN has pointed out, she has consensus-building skills in addition to that. She is someone who has been able to bring together people of diverse views. With such a divided Court, as we see right now, I think it is going to be very helpful—if she gets through our process, which I believe she will—to have her on that Court. She also is a trailblazer.

She was the first woman dean at Harvard Law School in their 186-year history. In 2009 she became the first woman to serve as Solicitor General. As has been pointed out, she has also been a law professor, a member of the White House Counsel’s Office, and a domestic policy adviser to President Clinton.

When I look at her resume, I notice two things: The first is that she has practical experience thinking about the impact of laws and policies on the lives of ordinary Americans. When you are involved in considering the nitty-gritty details of policies—as has emerged, as we look at all the thousands and thousands of documents she has given to the Judiciary Committee—she is someone who has been actually involved in crafting those ideas, those policies. When you have to figure out, as she has, whether to compromise or hold firm on a piece of legislation, you have to know exactly what the consequences of your recommendations will be. You have to think about the lives that will be impacted.

The second thing I notice about her resume is that she has a track record of listening to different viewpoints and bringing people together—whether it is her legacy of helping to recruit talented academics to Harvard from across the political spectrum or working with Senators from both parties on antitobacco legislation.

It is worth noting this is a nominee who once got a standing ovation from the Federalist Society when she spoke to them—that is a conservative legal society—during her time as a law school dean. It was not because she agreed with them on every substantive matter. In fact, she noted that at the beginning. It was because they respected her because she was willing to listen to other viewpoints and bring in other viewpoints. We need that kind of consensus builder on the Supreme Court of the United States.

Finally, we have to add to her list of achievements that she managed to calm the factionalism and frustration for which the law school faculty had previously been known. I can tell you after managing 167 lawyers it is not easy, but it is even harder to manage a number of law professors.

What you come up with, when you look at her whole career, is she has the practical experience of reaching out to and working with people who have different beliefs. I think that is exactly what we need on the Supreme Court.

Some of my colleagues, as has been pointed out, question whether she is fit to be a Supreme Court Justice because she has never before been a judge. Well, right now every single Justice on that Supreme Court has been a judge. While they may have different backgrounds, they have come up through what is called the “judicial monastery.” I think the fact that the President has nominated someone who has been on the front line, deciding policies but also arguing intricate legal cases, is a good thing.

As has been pointed out by Senator SHAHEEN, I do wonder whether these same colleagues who are objecting on the judicial experience issue would have objected to putting Chief Justice Rehnquist on the Supreme Court or Justice Brandeis or Justice Frankfurter. They did not have any judicial experience either.

It is worth noting this opinion on the importance of judicial experience is not shared by at least one member of the Supreme Court who believes that may not quite be necessary. In a speech he gave at the end of May, Justice Scalia said he was “happy to see that this latest nominee is not a federal judge—and not a judge at all.”

For historical context, Justice Scalia noted when he first arrived at the Supreme Court in 1986, three of his colleagues had never been a Federal judge. Chief Justice Rehnquist came to the bench from the Office of Legal Counsel. Justice Byron White was Deputy Attorney General. Justice Lewis Powell was a private lawyer in Richmond. Beyond that, her current job—Solicitor General—as Senator SHAHEEN noted, is actually referred to as “the tenth Justice” because it is such an important position. She represents the people before the Supreme Court. That is incredibly important training for an individual nominated to serve on the Supreme Court.

It is worth noting that the last Solicitor General who subsequently became a Supreme Court Justice was none other than Thurgood Marshall—Elena Kagan's mentor and former boss.

So I hope we can put to rest this idea that only judges are qualified to be Justices. That is not a standard that we have applied throughout history, and it is not one we should start applying today.

Just think—and I will end with this, Mr. President—how far we have come. When Sandra Day O'Connor graduated from law school 50 years ago, the only offer she got from a law firm was for a position as a legal secretary. Justice Ginsburg faced similar obstacles. When she entered Harvard in the 1950s, she was only one of nine women in a class of more than 500, and one professor actually asked her to justify taking a place in that class that could have gone to a man. Later, she was passed over for a prestigious clerkship despite her impressive credentials.

In the course of the more than two centuries of this great country, 111 Justices have served on the Supreme Court. Only three have been women. If confirmed, Ms. Kagan would be the fourth, and for the first time in the history of our country three women would take their places on the bench when arguments are heard in the fall.

I look forward to our Judiciary Committee hearing. I have to tell you, I hope my colleagues listen to what Elena Kagan has to say. When she came before our Judiciary Committee as a nominee for Solicitor General, she was very impressive. She got bipartisan support. I would like to see that again.

Our job is to look at the qualifications of this nominee. Our job is to decide if she is competent. As Senator GRAHAM said during the confirmation hearing for Justice Sotomayor, he may not have picked a particular nominee, he may have supported someone else for President, but in the end, our job is to look at their qualifications and whether they will serve our country well on the Supreme Court.

I believe the answer for Elena Kagan will be yes. We are all looking forward to the hearings, and I urge my colleagues to come to the hearings with an open mind.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

AMERICAN JOBS AND CLOSING TAX LOOPHOLES ACT OF 2010

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of the House message to accompany H.R. 4213, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Motion to concur in the House amendment to the Senate amendment to H.R. 4213, an act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to extend certain expiring provisions, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Baucus motion to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill, with Baucus amendment No. 4301 (to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill), in the nature of a substitute.

Reid amendment No. 4344 (to amendment No. 4301), to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to extend the time for closing on a principal residence eligible for the first-time homebuyer credit.

Thune/McConnell amendment No. 4333 (to amendment No. 4301), of a perfecting nature.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will be 5 minutes of debate equally divided between the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Iowa or their designees.

The Senator from Montana is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 4301

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, this vote is about jobs—plainly and simply about jobs. Fifteen million Americans are out of work. Fifteen million Americans need our help.

We need to continue our efforts to get Americans back to work. Creating jobs has been a top priority. The pending substitute amendment to the American Jobs and Closing Tax Loopholes Act would help achieve that goal.

The amendment would cut taxes for American workers and families by more than $4 billion. The amendment would cut taxes for businesses by $18 billion to help them expand and create jobs.

The amendment would extend Small Business Administration loan programs to help restore the flow of credit. These programs will help small businesses to grow and hire new workers. This extension eliminates fees for certain SBA loans and increases government loan guarantees.

Since their creation in the Recovery Act, these provisions have supported more than $26 billion in small business lending. They have helped to create or retain more than 650,000 jobs.

The amendment would expand community college and career training grants offered through the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program. These grants provide Americans who have lost their jobs through no fault of their own the opportunity to learn new skills to find good jobs.

The amendment would support more than 350,000 jobs for youth ages 14 to 24 by expanding successful summer jobs programs created in the Recovery Act. This age group has some of the highest unemployment levels. Fully one-quarter of those aged 16 to 19 are unemployed—one-quarter.

The amendment would extend funding for States to provide wage assistance to employers who hire new workers. Wage assistance helps companies that might not otherwise be able to afford the cost of hiring new workers to create jobs.

The amendment would provide targeted, temporary pension relief to help employers who are struggling in this tough economy to continue to fund employee pensions without cutting jobs or restricting new hiring.

This amendment is about creating good jobs.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair, and I urge my colleagues to support the amendment. Let's advance this effort to create jobs.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, this bill, as it comes forward, spends more money than we budgeted for and, as a result, it violates the budget. We are trying to get some fiscal discipline around here. This would be one of the places we should start.

So I raise a point of order that the pending amendment offered by the Senator from Montana would cause the aggregate level of budget authority and outlays for fiscal year 2010, as set out in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget, S. Con. Res. 13, to be exceeded. Therefore, I raise a point of order under section 311(a)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 and section 4(g)(3) of the Statutory Pay-As-You-Go Act of 2010, I move to waive all applicable sections of those acts and applicable budget resolutions for purposes of the pending amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. I announce that the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. BYRD) and the Senator from Arkansas (Mrs. LINCOLN), are necessarily absent.

Mr. KYL. The following Senator is necessarily absent: the Senator from Kansas (Mr. ROBERTS).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURRIS). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

COBELL SETTLEMENT

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, the legislation that is pending and on which we now have general debate is legislation that is important. I know there has been plenty of discussion about it. I want to discuss one element of it. The legislation includes provisions to approve the Cobell settlement. The Cobell settlement is perhaps something which people do not know much about. It is a settlement of a longstanding lawsuit that has been winding its way through the Federal courts for 14 years. It is about things that have been done to American Indians that are almost unthinkable and for which they have sought redress in the Federal courts.

Let me describe this, if I may, by using a photograph of a woman. This is a photograph of Mary Fish. By telling you a little about Ms. Fish, I can describe the problem that the Cobell settlement, which is in this underlying legislation, attempts to address.

Mary Fish died a few years ago. Mary Fish was an Oklahoma Indian. She lived in a very small, humble house with 40 acres. There were six oil wells on her land that had been pumping Oklahoma sweet crude for years. Even with all of these oil wells pumping on Mary's land, she made only a few dollars a year from those wells.

Why would it be the case that this woman had oil wells on her land, lived in a small, little house, had virtually nothing, and got only a few dollars from the oil wells? The problem dates back over 100 years when the Federal Government divided up Indian tribal lands, and distributed the land in trust to individual Indians, saying: We will take care of your land for you. We will manage it. We will handle it. And, by the way, we will provide you with the proceeds from leasing on the lands.

Almost as soon as this system was set up, the Indian people found that the Federal Government, and all kinds of other manipulators involved, stole from them, cheated, and looted their lands and trust accounts from those lands. The fact is, if you go back 100 years and try to reconnect the trust accounts the Federal Government said they were holding for these Indians—for grazing fees that were paid on the Indian lands, for oil that was pumped from Indian lands, for minerals, for agriculture—what you will find is this Federal Government going back all those years does not have any records, cannot reconnect, does not have the foggiest idea what happened. In addition, there were a lot of unscrupulous people who were stealing, cheating, and looting. That is why these American Indians, the first Americans—those who were here first—14 years ago filed a case in Federal court now called Cobell v. Salazar, a case against the Secretary of the Interior.

Cobell v. Salazar has languished for 14 years in the Federal court system. At long last, there has been a negotiated settlement to settle these claims that have existed for a long time. Claims of Indians being cheated by a government that, in some cases, was corrupt for over 100 years.

That settlement is in the underlying legislation. The settlement was not something the Congress did. The settlement was a settlement between the Department of the Interior, led by Secretary Salazar, and the plaintiffs, led by a woman named Elouise Cobell. Recently, the plaintiffs and the Department of the Interior reached an agreement—finally reached an agreement—to address this unbelievable set of terrible events over the last century that cheated American Indians out of what they were owed.

My colleague from Wyoming has offered an amendment to change the settlement. My colleague, Senator BARRASSO, is someone with whom I work on the Indian Affairs Committee. I am Chair; he is Vice Chair of the Committee. I have great respect for him. I do not take issue with the fact he thinks this settlement, perhaps, could be better. I don't know that. He has some ideas on how it can be changed.

The dilemma is that we are not a party to the negotiations to reach that settlement. Perhaps if the Senator would send his recommendations to the Secretary of the Interior and the plaintiffs and they sit down at a table and decide if they want to renegotiate this or decide that. Whether there are other ideas that could or should be added, perhaps that might be beneficial. But if the Congress now decides that this settlement, which is to be paid out of the United States Judgement Fund, is not something that Congress supports, that it needs to be changed, then I think this settlement will be scuttled, and we will be back in the same position we were in.

The Federal judge who watched over the negotiations that reached a settlement in the Cobell case set a deadline of 30 days and then a second deadline and then a third deadline. The Congress missed all of those deadlines—every single one. The Federal judge a few weeks ago said: I would like to call Members of Congress down to my court to find out what on Earth they are doing, what is going on. Why can this settlement not get approved by Congress, because after 14 years, I think the Federal court believed a settlement agreed to by both parties was the appropriate thing to do. Despite this, Congress has missed all the deadlines.

In these proceedings we have been considering the Cobell settlement which is a part of the underlying legislation. I support that settlement. Is it perfect? I don't know. I was not a part of the negotiating team. That was the Interior Department and the plaintiffs, the Native Americans on behalf of the plaintiffs who have been cheated over all these years.

My colleague Senator BARRASSO says the parties themselves made changes to the settlement and so they should not mind a few more changes by the Congress. The difference is who makes the changes. The party to a settlement can make changes by agreement of the parties. But if Congress makes changes unilaterally, of course, then Congress risks voiding the entire settlement, which I fear would be the case.

Senator BARRASSO's amendment would change the settlement and I think risk sending these parties back into endless litigation that has gone on now for 14 years. I do not think anybody wants that.

Senator BARRASSO has said his proposed changes are within the framework of the settlement. But the administration, Secretary Salazar, and others have already sent a letter to the Congress saying it believes these changes are material and would, therefore, void the settlement. I do not think any of us would want that to happen.

My colleague Senator BARRASSO has not said the settlement is unreasonable or unjust, only that he wants to improve the settlement. With great respect to my colleague—and I do like him, and we work together well on a lot of issues—I believe now is not the time to decide after 14 years that this settlement needs improvement.

If the changes are within the framework of the settlement, my recommendation is that he meet with the parties who were at the table and reached this settlement. If they believe his ideas have some merit, maybe some of them will find their way into the settlement. The Congress was not a party to that settlement and should not make unilateral changes.

I hope very much we can finally resolve more than a century of theft and mismanagement through this settlement. When I talked about looting, stealing, cheating, and theft, I understand that. I said that deliberately. That is exactly what has happened. Even worse has been the unbelievable mismanagement of those funds that cheated a whole lot of people.

This is a photograph, as I indicated, of Mary Fish. I said she had six oil wells on her land. She lived in a humble little house and got a couple dollars from them. Somebody else got the money. Who got the money? What happened to the money from the oil wells on this woman's land that led her to die before she had a chance to lead a good life, to have the resources that should have been hers?

I have another photograph, this woman's name is Susan White Calf. She is from the Blackfeet tribe. She is a Blackfeet Indian. She passed away in November of 2007. This picture was in

Mr. President, 2001, by the way, was the same year that the Federal courts found that the Federal Government had broken its trust responsibility to the American Indians by this unbelievable mismanagement of Indian trust funds. The Federal Government said: Trust us. We will take care of your funds. We will take care of your assets. Trust us. The fact is, unbelievable mismanagement, some theft, and some looting occurred.

Six years later after 2001, 6 years after the courts found that the Federal Government had broken its trust responsibility to American Indians, Susie died, still waiting to get the money that was owed her for grazing leases on land she owned. This is money that Susie White Calf should have had during her life but did not because the Federal Government dropped the ball, was guilty of unbelievable mismanagement. This problem of mismanagement goes back well into the 1800s.

When you read the stories of how the Indians were cheated and the federal mismanagement, and then take a look at where the records were being stored. It is unbelievable. You cannot even reconstruct the records that were stored in rat-infested warehouses. You cannot find some records, and you find others in rat-infested warehouses.

I ask unanimous consent to proceed for as much time as I may consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I will not speak long. Let me continue and finish.

When the historic accomplishment occurred of settling this lawsuit after 14 years between the Federal Government and the plaintiffs, when that historic agreement was reached, I was hopeful the Congress would move very quickly and provide the resources, from the Settlement Fund, that are available to make this settlement work.

I hope very much, if there is a vote—I don't know there will be a vote on the Barrasso amendment, I hope very much my colleagues will oppose it.

I say to Senator BARRASSO that the ideas, recommendations, and thoughts he has about this settlement should be presented to both sides who negotiated the settlement. In fact, if Congress were to unilaterally make changes, I think it would void the settlement. Void it after 14 long years and a lot of important work that would culminate in a settlement that plaintiffs have been waiting for and plaintiffs well deserve.

I urge my colleagues, as the Administration has urged, let us not unilaterally go outside the settlement that has been structured and negotiated. Let's decide to do what I believe Congress has a responsibility to do.

The longer this drags out, the more the American people see what was done to American Indians, the more people see how badly some of these people were cheated. Yes, this woman, who never got her money and died long before that money was ever available. Yes, this woman, who lived humbly all her life with six oil wells on her land and got virtually nothing from it. Do we have to continue to talk about these issues, or should we settle this and do what the Federal Government should do: own up to its responsibility, say we have done wrong here, say we will fix it now, say the trust accounts are going to work the way they should work. But to recompense for past mistakes and for money that was not given to the first Americans that the Federal Government promised would be theirs, that belonged to them, came from their lands, let's not interrupt that with an amendment on the floor of the Senate on this legislation. Let us instead decide we will ratify this agreement and put this behind us.

It is a very sad, sorry chapter in the history of this government in the way they have treated American Indians.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. KAUFMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the previous order regarding debate be extended to 1 p.m. under the same conditions, and limited.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KAUFMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business for up to 20 minutes.

RESTORING MARKET CREDIBILITY

Mr. KAUFMAN. Mr. President, I have always believed—and I have spoken many times on the Senate floor—that the two most important things that make America great are democracy and free capital markets.

But over the last year, as many of my colleagues are aware, I have become deeply concerned that the credibility of our stock markets—one of our Nation's most precious national treasures—can no longer be taken for granted.

On May 6, when the markets yo-yoed up and down, plunging 573 points in a mere 5 minutes before recovering 543 points in the next 90 seconds—it was nothing less than an embarrassment.

The strength of our stock market depends on its ability to establish an accurate price for a company's fundamental value that reflects a consensus among buyers and sellers at any given moment.

In that capacity, the markets failed, in fact they spectacularly failed, for a harrowing 20-minute time period.

In the aftermath of May 6, the integrity of our markets has been questioned, and investor confidence has been shaken.

In order to restore market credibility and instill confidence among the investing public, regulators and lawmakers alike must act wisely but urgently to fix the structural schisms that plague today's capital markets.

That is why I am encouraged, and relieved, that Mary Schapiro, the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, clearly understands what is at stake.

Testifying before the Senate Subcommittee for Securities, Insurance, and Investment on May 20, she said:

I believe the markets exist for public companies to raise capital, to build businesses, and create jobs, and they exist for investors to support that activity. And those are the number one and number two purposes of markets. And everything else from my perspective has to be put into the context of those two goals.

At a panel last week in Montreal at the International Organization of Securities Commissions, Chairman Schapiro reiterated that point, saying the SEC needs to . . .

[E]xplore whether bids and orders should be regulated on speed so there is less incentive to engage in this microsecond arms race that might undermine long-term investors and the market's capital-formation function. The markets have to serve that function for companies to raise money, create jobs and allow the economy to grow . . . We are also looking at whether and to what extent pre-trade price discovery is impaired by the diversion of desirable, marketable order flow from public markets to dark pools.

I couldn't agree more with Chairman Schapiro.

May 6 made clear what many have long claimed: today's overly-fragmented marketplace, which seems to favor speed over substance, and trading over investing, may be inhibiting the capital-formation process and failing to protect the interests of long-term investors.

If that is the case, then regulatory action is needed urgently.

Simply put, do stock prices adequately reflect the economics of the companies they represent?

On May 6, when liquidity vanished and established companies like Accenture traded briefly for a penny a share, the answer to the question of whether our markets are performing their central function was clearly no.

But rather than an aberration, it appears that the May 6 flash crash was no isolated event.

On June 2, we saw yet another "mini-flash crash" in the stock of Diebold, a technological services company.

Prior to 12:22 p.m. that day, Diebold had traded at around $28 per share and within a range of roughly 80 cents.

In the next minute, the rug was swept out from under Diebold as 399,000 shares were traded and Diebold's stock price plunged 35 percent to $18.

By 12:40, Diebold was once again trading at $28 per share.

The sudden decline in price appeared to be in response to news of Diebold's settlement with the SEC over fraudulent accounting practices, which Bloomberg began reporting at 12:25 and Diebold confirmed with a press release a little more than an hour later.

The SEC should investigate both the manner in which the news broke and the trading activity that followed it.

In the aftermath of the extreme plunge, questions have been raised concerning the manner in which the SEC filed the complaint, which data feeds first reported it, and the electronic overreaction to the news—all of which suggest that the severe volatility in Diebold could have been largely avoided altogether.

The SEC was actually resolving an old investigation with Diebold, the settlement of which had been previously disclosed, and not making any new accusations against the company.

But when word of the complaint reached Bloomberg or other sources, it led to a "trigger" that potentially activated algorithms programmed to react immediately to breaking news. This may explain why trading activity in Diebold exploded shortly before the story broke publicly.

Notably, the SEC filed the complaint manually at the U.S. Federal District Court in DC during market hours rather than using the Public Access to Court Electronic Records—PACER—filing system.

Mr. President, regulators should add to their list the need to examine whether the precipitous drop in Diebold stock was the result of high frequency traders who can subscribe directly to market data and news feeds and perhaps had programmed faulty correlations into their algorithms to react to breaking news events.

Indeed, with so much of the marketplace dominated by high frequency traders employing similar strategies, an overreaction by a few algorithms looking to trade instantaneously on the basis of imprecise correlations could trigger a dramatic plunge.

While the algorithms' calculations may be accurate "most of the time," the chaos that ensues when they are not inexcusably undermines investor confidence.

In the Diebold case, once the algorithmic overreaction became clear, humans with actual knowledge of Diebold's true fundamentals quickly intervened. It is no surprise, then, that the stock price rebounded so quickly.

Though volatility has always been present in the markets, we see that without human judgment the speed of trading can indeed lead to very brief "bungee jumps" for individual stocks whenever there is a significant news event.

At the same time, regulators should also consider whether the extreme volatility in Diebold's stock is yet another example of sell orders breaking through a "razor-thin crust" of liquidity provided by high-frequency traders.

As we saw on May 6, the high-frequency traders who fill the order books on many market centers provide only "fleeting" liquidity, particularly in periods of market stress or uncertainty.

This is because many high frequency traders prefer to continuously place and cancel small, rapid-fire orders rather than risk letting their orders sit on public venues where they would increase order book depth and promote orderly markets.

Regardless of what caused Diebold's "bungee jump" or the May 6 market meltdown, we should all agree that such unusual market activity strikes at the very heart of our market's credibility.

Even if the SEC's circuit breaker pilot program—which would halt trading for 5 minutes in any S&P 500 stock that experiences a 10 percent price change in the previous 5 minutes—were in place, market and stop-loss orders would still remain vulnerable to a 10 percent insta-drop.

This situation undermines the confidence of long-term investors.

Mr. President, the Diebold incident and other factors from May 6 make me concerned about what our markets have become.

According to a research group survey of 145 market participants conducted in the weeks following May 6, I am not alone.

The Executive Summary of the survey results states overall investor confidence in the existing market structure is waning.

The summary says:

Barely half of all participants have at least a high degree of confidence in U.S. equity market structure; The buy side has the least confidence in U.S. equity market structure. This is particularly demoralizing given they are the guardians over much of our nation's equity investments; Participants no longer believe market structure strongly supports an orderly market; Increasingly, market participants believe that the U.S. equity market structure is not a level playing field.

These results underscore how critical it is for regulators to address problems with the current market structure in order to restore investor confidence and protect the strength and credibility of our capital markets.

Sadly, Mr. President, the fact is that we simply do not have the data we need to assess fully the impact of market structure changes on long-term investors.

Indeed, regulators currently lack sufficient information on the routing history of orders—including those that may go through broker-dealer internalization venues, other dark pools, and multiple exchanges and ECNs before being executed.

The SEC also acknowledges it does not have: "important information on the time of the trade or the identity of the customer.”

As Kevin Cronin, the director of Global Equity Trading at Invesco, a retail and institutional investment fund, said at a June 2 SEC Roundtable:

There are dimensions of cost that today we do not have the ability to really understand.

Accordingly, I have pushed for the SEC to quickly implement tagging for large traders and a consolidated audit trail in order to gain a more granular view of the marketplace.

Once the Commission has collected the data, it should improve its internal analytical capabilities while also making the data available in masked form to the public, or at least academics and independent analysts, so that objective experts can study market performance comprehensively.

I admit there are no easy solutions, Mr. President, but we need to strive to answer the difficult questions or millions of Americans will eventually lose confidence in our markets and leave what is already starting to look like a “casino.”

In that regard, Chairman Schapiro again appears to be on the right track. Regulators must consider, as she said, whether high frequency traders should be subject to speed limits and whether deep and valuable liquidity is being shielded from the public marketplace.

Our markets should not be reduced to a battle of algorithms in which capital formation is an afterthought and long-term investors are relegated to second-tier status, nor should the public “lit” markets house only “exhaust” order flow that is passed over by those who trade in dark pools.

Perhaps high-frequency traders who claim to be “modern-day market-makers” should be subject to some quoting obligations like their traditional market-maker predecessors.

Setting reasonable speed limits on how quickly such traders can withdraw their bids and offers, as Chairman Schapiro alluded to last week, could help level the playing field and make the markets safer and more stable for all investors.

I have also proposed requiring exchanges and market centers to allocate costs at least partially based on message traffic share.

Cancellations, of course, are not inherently bad—they can enhance liquidity by affording automated traders greater flexibility when posting quotes.

But with as many as 98 percent of orders placed on Nasdaq cancelled or otherwise unexecuted on a given trading day, their use is clearly excessive.

Those who choke the system with cancellations make the markets less efficient for investors. And they should pay the price for the inefficiencies they create.

Exchanges cater to high frequency traders in a variety of ways, by electing not to charge them for high cancellation rates, and providing co-location services for their computers right next to the exchanges’ own servers.

Fortunately, co-location and direct market data feeds appear to be on the regulatory radar—the CFTC proposed a rule last week to ensure exchanges provide “fair access” for, and increased transparency of, co-location services.

But new practices that further threaten market integrity have recently come to light.

Several market participants, including institutional investment adviser Southeastern Asset Management, have said exchanges are releasing private information on investor orders, including details on the total shares an investor has accumulated and other data that could be used by high-frequency traders to trade ahead of investor orders.

It is important to remember that these potentially disadvantaged institutional orders represent the tens of millions of Americans who invest in mutual, pension, and retirement funds.

These market practices, among many others, underscore how critical it is for regulators to keep pace with market developments. The May 6 flash crash and the miniflash crash in Diebold a month later have sounded the alarm that the very credibility of our market is at stake. While regulators must continue to rely on data to drive the rule-making process and be mindful of unintended consequences, they cannot delay in tackling the problems that leave us vulnerable to another flash crash today.

As an engineer and a graduate of Wharton Business School, I understand and appreciate as much as anyone the importance of innovation and technological development. I want to make it clear I am not interested in banning high frequency trading or dark pools, nor am I advocating a return to the horse-and-buggy system. But new technologies must operate in a regulatory framework that considers both positive and negative consequences. If the public marketplace has been reduced to a battle of algorithms in which liquidity is fleeting and inaccessible when investors need it the most, and if the deep liquidity that is so critical to establishing accurate prices—particularly during times of market stress—is largely traded in dark pools, that must be carefully but urgently remedied.

As John Wooden, the legendary UCLA basketball coach who passed away 2 weeks ago, used to say, “Be quick, but don’t hurry.”

Be quick, don’t hurry.

The SEC and CFTC must adopt the same philosophy as they confront the great challenges before them.

“Be quick, but don’t hurry.”

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KAUFMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I understand the time has been divided during this debate until 1 o’clock. Can I learn how much time is available on our side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority has 15 minutes remaining.

GULF OILSPILL

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I want to discuss briefly the President’s remarks last evening to the Nation about the oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico and the actions that this administration has been doing to address that. I would also like to discuss issues related to BP, the company that leased the area offshore and drilled the exploratory well which exploded in the gulf.

First of all, I know there is a great deal of anxiety, nervousness and anger about all this. I understand all that because all of us are frustrated that the oil continues to flow. It is a mile down beneath the surface of the water, which is known as a deepwater well. All of us are frustrated that this spill has not been contained. But the President did not cause that spill, and the President himself cannot fix it.

I do know this though. The Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Energy, and many other senior administration officials have brought together the best minds in the world as a team to try to evaluate what kinds of technologies and actions that can be used to fix that leak and stop that gusher. They have consulted many experts. They have consulted the Norwegians who drill in the North Sea in deepwater drilling. They have consulted with many interests. While it is not a case where they have not done everything conceivable to shut down that spill, and I think, as the President suggested last evening, we are beginning to make some good progress.

Then the next issue is how do you deal with the impact on the coastal regions in the Gulf of Mexico. This is unbelievably devastating to these States. How do you deal with that? As I have indicated, what about the guy who has a fishing boat on the pier. The pier is deserted. The boat sits at the end of the pier. There is no opportunity to fish.

And that person has to make a payment on the boat each month. What about that person and what about the tens of thousands of others like him? What about the ecological and environmental damage that has been caused as well? All of those issues are critically important.

I appreciate the fact that the President gave a speech to the Nation. I think it was important to do that. I also appreciate the fact that this administration was on this very quickly. But it is frustrating for them and for all of us that the leak from that well has not been stopped.

I do want to mention the issue of BP because the President mentioned it last night, and we have talked about it before. BP has said they will stand behind all legitimate claims and reimburse people for those impacts. I said last week—and I know the President has also now said it as well. It is one thing to make a pledge but another to follow through on a commitment. We have heard about pledges before. In the Exxon Valdez disaster, Exxon made a pledge to pay for the economic and other damages but then fought it for 20 years. A whole lot of folks died before they saw the result of what they were promised. So pledges are one thing. I want a binding commitment from the responsible party. If BP says they are going to stand behind this—if they do not stand behind this, the taxpayers will eventually end up picking up the tab. So the issue is, if BP says: We pledge this, I say that is fine, let's make it a binding commitment. Put the money in a recovery fund. You can call it what you want—a trust fund, an escrow account, a recovery fund. Put the money in there so we know it will be available for use to those who have been impacted. I also think that there needs to be some sort of special master work to find a mechanism by which you begin to get the money out to the people who are hurting. That is what needs to be done.

There is debate about whether BP should pay a dividend to its shareholders that it announced several weeks ago. Of course they should not pay a dividend. There ought to be no dividend at this point. They need to have the money available to recompense all of the damages for all of the people and all the natural resource damages that have occurred as a result of this devastating gusher a mile under the ocean. So I don't want them to pay a dividend. They shouldn't be talking about a dividend. All of the discussion ought to be about how much money you put in this recovery fund.

Thad Allen has written to BP saying: How about some more transparency in how your are making decisions to compensate communities and individuals? I know BP has paid some funding to people, but Thad Allen has said: How about some increasing transparency? Let's find out what you are paying, whom you are paying, how you are paying. What is the criteria? How about some transparency here? We shouldn't have to be asking those questions. The money ought to be put in a fund, and that fund ought to be administered by people who are putting together the criteria by which we address the problems that are being confronted by people all up and down the Gulf Coast. That is what ought to happen.

Another company that is responsible here is Transocean. By the way, Transocean was the company who BP leased the mobile offshore drilling unit from, and they were drilling under contract for BP. They are going to have some responsibility as well, I expect.

Let me give you a description here because it is so symbolic of what is happening too often in this country. Transocean was an American headquartered company, but they moved to Switzerland not too long ago. Why did they move to Switzerland? I assume so they do not have to pay American taxes. Go find a tax haven so you do not have pay taxes to the United States. So they have, as I understand it, about 1,200 employees working in Houston, TX, and about 12 employees in Switzerland. Yet they declare Switzerland their headquarters.

They had a meeting in Switzerland some weeks ago and decided they were going to pay a $1 billion dividend to their shareholders. They ought not be paying dividends either. They, too, ought to keep this funding available in case it is needed—when it is needed—to be helpful to the people on the Gulf Coast who are seeing these unbelievable impacts. So they ought not be paying dividends at all.

Again, we should be asking questions about Transocean. Is it a big company that should have some liability here? I guess so. It operates 140 mobile offshore drilling units. It is the world's largest offshore drilling contractor. But again I say, as I have said before, why is it that when you pull the pages back and unearth the story, you discover, that this is a company that moved its headquarters for tax purposes? They first went to the Cayman Islands and then went to Switzerland. Yet, hey have a handful of people in Switzerland and most of the people in Texas. Why does it not want to be an American company? I guess to avoid paying U.S. taxes. Why is it that all these companies want the opportunity to utilize all that our country has to offer but none of the obligations to the country? It is unbelievable, to me.

But with respect to dividends, I say to BP and Transocean: Don't be doing that. You are going to need that money.

Let's make a binding commitment—no more pledges. That old movie, "Jerry McGuire," where Cuba Gooding, Jr., says, "Show me the money"—show me the money. Let's have that money go from a pledge to a binding commitment in a recovery fund, and that will give a whole lot of folks who are hurting today some feeling that maybe, just maybe, they are going to get helped.

I also wanted to make a couple of other points about how the Senate addresses energy and climate change legislation.

Last evening, the President talked about the need for Congress to take up energy legislation. I agree with that. The fact is, we passed an energy bill out of the Energy Committee last June. I want to debate and vote on it on the floor of the Senate.

There are all of these questions about energy versus climate change. Look, the Energy bill we passed will maximize the production of renewable energy. It will help build the transmission lines, the interstate highway of transmission capability, around our country that is necessary so that you can produce energy where the Sun shines and the wind blows and move it to the load centers where it is needed. It can help do all of these things. It includes provisions for building efficiency and retrofits. It does a lot of things to reduce carbon.

I guess my approach to energy is best described—and I didn't take Latin in a high school of nine students in my senior class. But I call my approach "totus porkus," which probably in Latin would mean something like "whole hog." I think we ought to do everything. Let's do everything and do it well. Let's responsibly produce more oil and gas here and do it the right way. Let's maximize wind, solar and other renewable resources. Let's have the first ever renewable energy standard that says we anticipate that 20 percent. We need to get 20 percent of all of the electricity produced from renewable sources. Let's support biomass and more biofuels. Let's do all of those things and do them well, even as we do them differently, including using coal by capturing the carbon.

By the way, there are a lot of ways to do that. Sandia National Laboratories is working on ways to change the way we think about CO<sub>2</sub>. Yes, CO<sub>2</sub> is a major problem, but it can also be a product. Why don't you think of this not just as a problem but a product? What kind of beneficial use can you develop with CO<sub>2</sub> that turns a problem into an asset?

I chair the subcommittee on appropriations that funds the energy research and development for the Department of Energy. We are doing a lot of unbelievable things that take a look at beneficial use of CO<sub>2</sub>. Even as we reduce the emissions into the atmosphere to try to protect this planet, we can find ways to use CO<sub>2</sub> in a beneficial way and protect our planet.

My point is this about taking up legislation: Some say, well, you have to bring climate change to the floor of the Senate right now. Look, I don't think there are 60 votes for a climate change bill. But if that is the case, we will see. But at this point, we do know we have a bipartisan bill on energy legislation from the Senate Energy Committee does all of the right things. We ought to try to reduce our dependency on foreign oil and do that soon. We can do that by bringing the Energy bill we have already passed on a bipartisan basis to the floor of the Senate—the sooner the better, in my judgment.

I know we are short of time. I know Senator REID and others—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used 10 minutes.

Mr. DORGAN. We have all talked about the prospects of debating energy legislation and want to do the right thing. I hope, as the President indicated last night, the right thing is to pass good, comprehensive energy legislation that will make us less dependant on foreign oil and begin to address climate change at the same time.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for up to 15 minutes as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GULF OILSPILL

Ms. LANDRIEU. I rise today for the purposes of giving some context and commenting in response to the President's speech last night as well as to some of my colleagues who have spoken on the need for a comprehensive energy policy as we move forward. But I would like to begin by just reminding us all that today is the 57th day of what may prove to be one of the most damaging environmental accidents in our Nation's history.

Fifty-seven days ago, the tragic explosion of the Deepwater Horizon took the lives of 11 men and unleashed an uncontrolled and uncontrollable, to date, torrent of oil and gas into the Gulf of Mexico. It threatens our environment, and it threatens our economy and the wetlands that underpin a way of life, a precious way of life in the gulf region.

I have had the—I guess unfortunate opportunity to spend some time with the widows. And I say "unfortunate" because I wish I could have met them under different circumstances. But to hear their remembrances of their husbands, to hear the way they expressed to me the heartfelt commitment their spouses had to this industry and to their work and their call for this work to be more safe, for companies to be held accountable, but also their call—which I think serves as real testimony on their behalf to the American people—their call for this deepwater industry to continue, was very moving to me and to all people who I think have had the opportunity to meet these young and very impressive women. I was proud to introduce the Senate resolution honoring these men and their families. I wish to thank my colleagues for agreeing to this resolution unanimously.

But today I wanted to speak on three important issues relative to this general situation: one, the need for better safety regulations and improvements at MMS; the other, the impacts of this moratoria; and the call for accelerated revenue sharing and an accelerated claims process. First, let me begin with the need for better safety regulations.

There are more than 300,000 men and women who work in the oil and gas industry in Louisiana alone. There are a significant number of them who work offshore and directly support both the offshore and onshore industry. The offshore crewmen know this work can be dangerous. They go through a variety of safety drills and regulations routinely. And we owe it to them to make sure these activities are safer in the future. For this reason, I have fully supported a thorough review of offshore drilling safety standards and have applauded the Department, and particularly Secretary Ken Salazar, for his willingness to clean house at the Minerals Management Service.

This tragedy brought to light an unhealthy relationship that has existed, unfortunately for many years, between the oil industry and the Federal regulators who are called to regulate them, to make sure this industry is safe. That must be changed. The regulators did not have the resources to push back. They did not have the expertise.

We in Congress bear some responsibility for that. And that did not start under President Obama's administration, but it should end under President Obama's administration. This Congress systematically undermanned and underfunded this important agency by not giving it the appropriate attention it needs, and it is our responsibility to fix it.

I look forward to meeting with the man whom the President has appointed or nominated to head MMS. I will be making my own independent decision of whether he is the right person for this position. Until I meet him and talk with him and understand a little bit more about him, I will reserve my judgment.

We need a Minerals Management Service that is to be a proud, competent, and respected industry watchdog. We need the watchdog back. We need the cop back on the beat if we are to ensure that an accident of this magnitude never happens again off our shores. As I have said, Minerals Management—many of these employees are my constituents. One of their main offices is in Metairie, LA. I have been there. I have met many of them, and they are some very good people. But they need to be well managed. They need to be well led. They need to be given the resources they need to do the job they can do if that happens.

The Coast Guard also has a role to play. We should strengthen the Coast Guard's role and make sure that between Interior and the Coast Guard, they are getting the job done for the American people.

Nobody in the country wants this job done better, nobody wants this industry more safe than the people from Louisiana and Mississippi and Alabama and Texas who man these rigs, although, as you know, when you were with me, Mr. President, some of our people said to you in the meeting just last week: We were grateful for the men from Illinois who came down to work on these rigs. So we want people to know we have people from all over the country, from Illinois and Maine who come and do shifts 2 weeks offshore, make a good living for their family, support their families for years. We want it to be safe for everyone.

So I applaud the President and Secretary Salazar for getting MMS back on the right track. That work needs to be done. As I said, the cop needs to be put back on the beat.

Let me speak for a few minutes, though, about this ill-conceived and arbitrary 6-month moratorium. The effort the President is making to ensure this terrible tragedy never happens again is commendable. It is beyond aggravating. It is disgusting. It angers us so much to see the terrible tragedy unfolding on our televisions and to open newspapers across the land and see the most horrific pictures of wildlife being affected, of dolphins and pelicans and birds, precious places to us that we not only work but vacation with our families for many years.

It is very hard to look at those pictures. Americans are suffering through this as we watch this horror movie unfold. But what the President has done could cause even more economic damage than the spill itself, by putting a 6-month moratorium on all rigs drilling below 500 feet.

I know we have to make sure these 33 floating rigs that drill in deep water and the other standard platforms that drill between 500 and 1,000 feet are safe. But I wish to say unequivocally and with the support of the vast majority of the people of my State and throughout the gulf, 6 months is too long. The deepwater industry cannot survive in the gulf with a 6-month pause. This work has to be done more quickly. The commission was announced last month. It was just seated a few days ago. The work is just beginning. There doesn't seem to be a sense of urgency. We need a greater sense of urgency to get this work done.

I was pleased to hear the President say he has urged them to get their work done before the 6-month timeframe. That was a slight step in the right direction. But this work has to be done in a much shorter period than 6 months. These rigs will not stay in the gulf for 6 months idling at a cost of $500,000 a day. They can't be fiduciarily responsible to their investors and do that. They have to move to where they can drill. So they will. We have already received signals they will simply pick up and move off the coast of Africa or Brazil or Cuba or other places—Venezuela—to drill. They can't sit idly in the gulf. We have to figure out a way to make sure they are safe, that this never happens again, and make sure they don't leave. That is the challenge before this administration in the next couple of days and weeks, starting with a meeting I will have with Secretary Salazar this afternoon with a broad coalition of leaders, both from the private sector and the public sector, who are committed to keeping the economy of the gulf coast strong. We have to find a way forward that is somewhere between doing nothing and having all of these rigs leave and not come back for several years. That is one of the points on the moratorium.

Second, I wish to ask the President for his personal support and the support of this body to accelerate revenue sharing, or to accelerate revenue sharing to accelerate a large stream of revenue that is reliable for the Gulf Coast States to be able to rebuild our barrier islands, to rebuild our coast, to sustain this economy and this ecology and this environment over the long run so we can produce the oil and gas this country desperately needs.

Even though this Horizon accident happened 57 days ago, 57 days ago this country was using 20 billion barrels of oil a day. Today, 57 days later, 11 lives lost, the rig at the bottom of the ocean, we are still using 20 billion barrels a day. The President did not say to people last night to park their cars and walk to work. He didn't say that. I didn't hear him say that.

We have to understand we have to continue to drill for oil and gas. But when we drill for oil and gas, the taxes that are paid to the Federal Government and have been paid over the years to the tune of $165 billion to the Federal Government from severances and royalties, that some of that money come back to the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Texas, and, yes, even Florida, in my view, even if they decide not to drill. They are at risk. They are at the front line. We are not the only coastal States, but we are the frontline coastal States. Those revenues need to come back to us.

We passed a bill some years ago, a bill I worked on for 15 years, called the Landrieu-Domenici Gulf of Mexico Energy Security Act. That bill is in effect. But because of concerns about the deficit, because of a lack of understanding of the urgency by this Congress and past Congresses, that money doesn't come to us until 2017. We can see that is too late. We can see it with our own eyes. We can feel it with our own heart. We can see it is too late now. We needed that money 20 years ago. We needed it 5 years ago. We need it today.

For any energy bill to pass, with all due respect to my good friend, BYRON DORGAN; with all due respect to Senators who have been leading this energy effort, there will be no energy bill. The gulf coast Senators will not allow it. There will be no energy bill of any magnitude without recognizing the vital need for these Gulf Coast States to share appropriately, as interior States share the revenues for drilling. Interior States such as New Mexico, Wyoming, Utah keep 50 percent of the taxes. So the State of Wyoming last year got $1 billion. We could clean up a lot of pelicans with $1 billion. Louisiana got virtually nothing.

Our people are on the front line with oil washing up to their knees, and this Congress basically keeps 100 percent of the money. Those days are over. We are going to have some kind of accelerated revenue sharing in any energy bill. Gulf coast Senators will not allow a bill to pass this floor without something we believe is fair to our people.

The third issue I wish to speak to the President about and to the Congress—and the President mentioned it last night, and I am grateful—is an accelerated claims process. These claims are going to be different than any kind of claim process that has been paid, maybe similar to what happened after Katrina and Rita, as Mississippi and Louisiana and Alabama struggled with how to make people whole. This is going to be a complicated and difficult situation. We have workers who can't work, who were used to making $500 to $1,000 a week, pretty fairly decent wages, not great but decent. They have not been able to work for a long time.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Ms. LANDRIEU. I ask unanimous consent for 5 additional minutes.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, that is a modest wage and a decent wage. But it gets a lot more complicated than that. There are boat captains who were getting their business back after Katrina and Rita, recreational boat captains, fishing captains. Unlike Florida where people will come to the beach and then they will see a boat charter and they will wander onto the wharf and charter the boat, that does not happen in Louisiana because we don't have many beaches. People call from Mexico and Canada and all over the country months in advance and charter a specific boat with a specific captain because we have some of the best fishing in the world. They come with their sons and daughters and their grandsons and granddaughters. They come down with major corporate groups and do this chartering. These companies make millions of dollars a year. They can't work either.

This claims process is going to be difficult. We have restaurants in New Orleans that are 70 miles from the gulf. They have had to either shut their doors or turn down their number of hours of operating or take things off their menus. I don't know how we will calculate the economic damage to them. This is going to be complicated.

We have hotels. We have retirees who own three or four condos. A woman came up to me and said: MARY, my mother is not a business person. She is a retiree. She owns a couple of condos in Florida. That is her retirement income. She rents out these condos. She has had all cancellations this summer. What am I going to do for her?

That is a good question. She will file a claim.

From retirees with condos they rent out to supplement their incomes to fishing boat captains to hotels to restaurants and to the workers themselves, I am glad the President is taking the bull by the horns with this claims process. I hope he is having a frank discussion with Tony Hayward at his office today about that to make sure we don't have one bankruptcy, that we don't have one business, a small business or a medium-size business or a large business that goes bankrupt because of BP's gross negligence in the Gulf of Mexico. They have put the industry at risk. They have put the gulf coast at risk. That claims process needs to work. We have a great job to do ahead of us.

Those are the three points I wished to make. One, we most certainly need to move forward on a balanced energy bill. There will be no energy bill; gulf coast Senators will block anything that does not have immediate help for Gulf Coast States. Let my colleagues be on notice. We can debate the rest of the bill, how we move forward, whether we do nuclear or a portion of drilling or wind or solar. These Gulf Coast States are on the front lines, and we are going to get justice for them in the near future. We are going to accelerate and make the claims process more robust, and we are going to continue to put pressure on the White House and Secretary Salazar, respectfully, but appropriately, to say: Let's get our safety work done in the gulf. We cannot lose this industry. We cannot lose these jobs. Our economy depends on it.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGAMAN). The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BURRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. BURRIS. Mr. President, I recognize this is Republican time, and should a Republican come, I will then yield the floor to that colleague of mine.

(The remarks of Mr. BURRIS pertaining to the submission of S. Res. 559 are printed in today's RECORD under "Morning Business.")

GULF OILSPILL

Mr. BURRIS. Mr. President, very briefly, in terms of President Obama's speech last night on the crisis in the gulf, I just want to let it be known for the record that I support our President in that speech and every effort he has made in trying to get direction and a solution to the problems we are experiencing down on our gulf coast.

I find it disheartening and disappointing all these commentators who want to attack our President, want him to be angry, want him to act. I have no idea what they want this man to do. But I know this man is doing all he can for the people of America. I ask those commentators to get off of his back, stop attacking the President, who had nothing to do with that problem and is putting everything he has with the resources America has to solve this problem.

This has never happened before in our history. It is a problem beyond comprehension. Yet, still, these Monday morning quarterbacks sit back and criticize and bring out their undocumented types of statements about our President that I just feel emotionally disturbed about.

So I say to all Americans, this President is doing all he can to support this issue we are facing, and you have to deal with BP, you have to deal with Transocean, and you have to deal with Halliburton. Those are the ones who are responsible for this problem. Let's go after them. Make them pay. Make them deal with this and get the solution and, therefore, Americans can move forward.

Thank you, Mr. President.

I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURRIS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Florida is recognized.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. President, I come to the floor today to talk about the crisis we are having in the Gulf of Mexico and how it is impacting Florida, with the worst economic and environmental disaster in our Nation's history.

Yesterday, I had the opportunity to be with the President of the United States, along with our Governor, Congressman JEFF MILLER, and other State and local leaders, and we talked to the President about the oilspill and what needs to be done in order to mitigate the damage that is happening to Florida and the other Gulf States.

The most important thing I wanted to stress with the President of the United States is that after capping the well, which is job 1—and we have some confidence and the President reported he hopes by the end of this month at least 90 percent of the oil will be captured from the wellhead—but the next most important priority is keeping that oil from coming on shore.

Right now, there is a slick of oil that is 2 miles wide and 40 miles long. It is oil that has come up, apparently, off the bottom of the ocean. There is this "lava lamp" effect that is happening now, where the oil, depending upon the heat of the day, is sinking and rising in the ocean. This is part of that plume that British Petroleum said did not exist, and it is a darker and heavier oil than what we have seen before. This is not merely the sheen that is on the top. That oil is right off the shore of Pensacola.

We need to make sure that oil does not come ashore, does not come on our beaches, does not get into Pensacola Bay, does not go through the Perdido Pass, does not get into those wetlands and marshes. The best way we can do that is to get more skimmers off the coast of Florida.

As of yesterday, there were 32 skimmers off the coast of Florida. That is simply unacceptable. We know from Admiral Allen that there are 2,000 skimmers in the United States. I brought this point up to the President of the United States.

Maybe all of them are not available to come to Florida. But if 500 of them were available to come to the Gulf of Mexico, that would be a huge improvement. There should not be 32 skimmers off the coast of Florida; there should be hundreds of skimmers, especially with this looming threat of this oil coming ashore.

I have asked for weeks that every skimmer that is available in this country and every skimmer that is available around the world be on its way to Florida. I brought up this issue with the President and Admiral Allen. Why aren't there more skimmers? I was told that Admiral Allen is trying to get as many as possible.

We need a sense of urgency to get those skimmers off our shores.

I asked specifically about foreign countries offering aid to bring their skimmers to Florida and the other Gulf States and I was told that we have help from foreign countries, but yesterday the State Department says that 21 offers from 17 countries to bring help to Florida and the other Gulf States have been refused. Which is it? Are they helping or are we refusing them? We have to get that communications mishap, that misunderstanding, under control. If the foreign countries want to bring their skimmers here, we should welcome them, and the other equipment they can bring to help us ameliorate this oil as it comes ashore.

I am going to stay laser focused on this. We are going to do a skimmer watch. Every day I am here, I am going to come to the floor and report to this Senate, this Congress, and the people of the United States how many skimmers are off the coast of Florida. This is something the Federal Government should do. Thirty-two skimmers sounds as though my buddies and I got some boats out there and did it. It doesn't sound like the Federal Government. The lives of the people of Florida are at stake. Their businesses, their livelihoods are at stake.

I was told by the owner of the pier in Pensacola and a lady who worked for him that people are coming to the beach in Pensacola to see the beach one last time, as if they were visiting a friend on his or her deathbed, because they don't think the beach is ever going to look the same. So they are coming with their cameras and they are bringing their children and showing them what a snow-white beach looks like because they don't think they are going to see it again.

I have had grown men—men I have known 10, 20 years of my life, professionals—come up to me with tears in their eyes worrying about what this is going to mean for Florida. Ninety percent of Floridians live within 10 miles of the coast. People move to Florida because they love the water. We have more recreational boaters and fishermen than any other State. We have more coastline than any State in the continental United States. Only Alaska surpasses us in coastline. We have more beaches than any State in the United States. Water is part of our way of life, and we need to see a more robust effort.

I am appreciative of the President on this escrow fund he has set up, and we have just gotten a report that BP is going to put $20 billion into this escrow account. We have been asking for this since the beginning of May. I am glad the President got it done. While I don't always agree with the President, where credit is due, credit should be given, and he should be given credit for this and getting it done. We need those dollars to pay claims. We need those dollars because Floridians are getting mixed results from BP about paying those claims. So I am appreciative of the President for taking the idea, executing it, and getting it done. Now we need to see the same attention to detail and urgency in trying to keep that oil from coming to shore, and I look forward to that.

We have failed from the beginning to understand the scope of this spill. On April 23 we thought there were 200 barrels a day leaking. On April 28 it was moved up to 5,000; May 27, 19,000; June 10, 40,000; today, 60,000 barrels a day. Sixty thousand barrels a day leaking into the Gulf of Mexico. That is 2½ million gallons per day; to date an estimated 146 million gallons. We are eclipsing the Exxon Valdez each week that goes by.

We have to stay vigilant. The President must stay involved. I hope he will come back to Florida. We are going to look for him to lead us through this. No one wants the President to succeed more than I do in this particular matter because it is the livelihood of Floridians. It is our economy and it is our environment that is at stake.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGAMAN). The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about the Thune amendment.

In a few weeks we will celebrate our Nation's birthday. I find it ironic that 234 years after our forefathers first led the fight for independence with the battle cry of "no taxation without representation," I am hearing similar protests from Missourians today. Their frustration is not only understandable, it is warranted.

Missourians and, I believe, Americans in every State across our Nation have said: No more. They have said no to runaway spending. They have said no to more big government policies. Failing to represent these views, the majority in Congress has fallen down on the job.

It is no wonder that Americans feel as though Washington is not listening since my friends on the other side of the aisle are asking us to ignore our Nation's $13 trillion debt, the largest in our Nation's history, and pass a bill that would add nearly another $79 billion to the deficit.

But there is a better way. There is a more responsible way. My colleague from South Dakota, Senator THUNE, has offered a substitute amendment that is paid for—paid for—cuts the deficit by $68 billion, and includes all the major priorities agreed to on a bipartisan basis by Democrats and Republicans.

In the Thune substitute, of which I am a proud cosponsor, we have a real opportunity to show the American people that we in Washington are listening. We have an opportunity to show the American people we are serious about addressing the most severe financial crisis this country has ever faced, and we have an opportunity for a rare moment of bipartisanship which, in recent years, has become all too uncommon in this body.

As does the proposal from Senator BAUCUS, the Republican alternative extends expiring unemployment benefits for struggling families until November; and as does the Baucus bill, the Republican alternative extends tax breaks to small businesses which they so desperately need to get back on their feet and start creating jobs. We need to assure them the longstanding tax benefits they depend on will continue.

However, unlike the Baucus bill which the majority is using as a vehicle to increase taxes permanently, increase spending and increase the deficit, the Republican alternative cuts taxes even more by an additional $26 billion, cuts spending by over $100 billion and, according to the Congressional Budget Office, reduces—reduces—the deficit by $68 billion, instead of increasing it.

The Thune amendment also stops the cuts to doctors and provides a 2-percent increase in Medicare reimbursement payments that go to doctors this year, and an additional 2 percent in 2011 and 2012. That is one more year than the doc fix in the Baucus bill, and it is actually paid for, not put on our children's credit cards.

I have heard from doctors across Missouri and they can no longer face the devastating cuts that threaten their livelihood and threaten our seniors' access to care. They are telling me they are going to have to stop taking Medicare patients, because the way Medicare is implemented now, they only get 80 percent of what it costs them to provide the service and they are saying, We just can't cut any more—we can't take any more Medicare patients. Hospitals are saying the same thing. That is before the half trillion dollar cut in Medicare reimbursement comes in. It perplexes me that the majority has not addressed that problem in what they told us was a comprehensive health care law.

Something else that was largely left out of the new health care bill was malpractice reform. The Thune amendment corrects this oversight and enacts comprehensive medical malpractice reform that will save up to $49 billion over 10 years.

My friend from Montana, Senator BAUCUS, takes the opposite approach. The bill he and the majority leader are asking us to support increases spending by $126 billion, including over $70 billion in new and permanent tax increases, and will increase the deficit by $79 billion over the next 10 years. The Baucus-Reid bill is exactly the kind of approach that history has shown us won't work and the American people have told us they don't want.

The American people have had it with Washington-gone-wild policies. They have had enough of the spending, the tax increases, the debt, the bailouts, the big government job-killing policies that have been pushed through Congress and have been supported by the administration. Today, the Republican alternative offers the majority an opportunity to reverse course, to end the out-of-control spending and get serious about fiscal responsibility.

When facing a crisis, words mean very little. To say you are concerned about the debt while voting to increase it means very little to our children and grandchildren who will have that bill on their credit cards and will have to foot the bill in the future. As the old country and western song goes: We need a little less talk and a lot more action. The Thune amendment offers us a real chance to bring sanity back to Washington policies and for Members of this body to show the American people they are serious about meeting needs while also addressing our growing deficit.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the Thune amendment and, after months of ignoring them, finally demonstrate to the American people that, yes, we are listening to them, we are concerned, we are going to do something about the debt, the deficit, and the other problems this country faces.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RECESS

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate stands in recess until 2 p.m.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 12:56 p.m., recessed, and reassembled when called to order by the Acting President pro tempore.

AMERICAN JOBS AND CLOSING TAX LOOPHOLES ACT OF 2010—Continued

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to a period of debate only until 3:30 p.m., with no amendments or motions in order during this time, and that the time be equally divided and controlled between the leaders or their designees, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each, and that the order for recognition for Senator BAUCUS remain in effect.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, before I suggest the absence of a quorum, I ask that the time be equally divided between the majority and the minority.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. President, the Senate will soon vote on the American Jobs Act—a critical bill that would create jobs and help expand small businesses. It would close the tax loopholes that allow far too many large corporations to move jobs overseas. In doing so, it would establish, conversely, tax incentives for American small businesses so they can create jobs in America. We have seen for too many years—and the Presiding Officer, in New Mexico, has seen too many jobs in Albuquerque, Santa Fe, as I have in Cleveland and other cities, move overseas because of trade agreements and bad tax law.

The Senate, we hope, is close to voting on extending unemployment insurance and COBRA subsidies through the extenders bill. Far too many Republicans seem to look at unemployment insurance as welfare. Unemployment insurance is what it is called—insurance. When you have a job, you pay into the unemployment fund. When you are laid off through no fault of your own, you can receive help from that insurance fund. It is as simple as that.

We cannot forget why we are in this untenable position of needing to help small businesses and workers and strengthen the public programs that help Americans find new jobs. We are here because of reckless Wall Street practices brought on by unprecedented greed that has created a crippling recession.

I rise to discuss the Wall Street reform bill, as it is now being negotiated in the conference committee, for a few moments.

Last week, David Wessel noted in the Wall Street Journal—the paper of record for finance, if you will—that when surveyed by the newspaper, leading economists suggested the prevailing belief that the Senate bill didn't go far enough to address the issue of banks being too big to fail.

During the Senate debate, I put forward a proposal with Senator KAUF-MAN, of Delaware, that would have addressed the problem by capping the size of megabanks.

Evidence backs up what has been abundantly clear in the last 2 years: Megabanks pose a greater risk and threat to our economy than smaller ones because of the heightened volatility of their assets and activities. Only 15 years ago, the largest six banks in the United States—their total assets were added up to be about 17 percent of GDP. Fifteen years ago, the combined assets of the six largest banks made up 17 percent of gross domestic product. Today, their combined assets make up about 63 percent of the GDP.

Our proposal would have limited the size of bank holding companies at \$1 trillion and investment banks at \$400 billion. Mr. President, \$1 trillion is \$1,000 billion. I can't believe people in this institution would defend, as so many did, that that is not a bank that is too big. Too big to fail, as people as conservative as Alan Greenspan, who is as much to blame for all of this—for the government's total failure during the Bush years to regulate Wall Street—even he said too big to fail is simply too big. Only from the rarefied heights of a glass or ivory tower does  $\frac{1}{2}$  trillion appear too limited. Remember, Lehman Brothers had more than \$600 billion in assets and liabilities when it failed and sent the markets into a tailspin.

We can all agree that our financial system should never again be on the brink of total collapse and that taxpayers should never have to foot the bill for the mess created by Wall Street. If we want to prevent bailouts, we have to prevent banks from becoming so big that bailouts are necessary. Why wouldn't big banks behave in a risky way when they suspect a bailout will be given? That is why we must not rely on a reactive approach to risks that can undermine our economy. Instead, we must be much more proactive to prevent those risks from ever recurring.

On June 3, Richard Fisher, the president of the Dallas Fed, explained in an important speech why we need to address the size of the megabanks. He said:

Ending the existence of “too big to fail” institutions is certainly a necessary part of any regulatory reform effort that could succeed in creating a stable financial system. It is the most sound response of all. If we are to neutralize the problem, we must force these institutions to reduce their size.

This isn't some far-left or far-right economist; this isn't some bomb thrower; this is Richard Fisher, the president of the Dallas Fed, emphasizing that too big to fail is, in fact, too big.

The Brown-Kaufman amendment wasn't adopted into the Wall Street reform bill that passed this body. Yet I continue to believe that it is essential if we want to prevent giant institutions from driving down the economy. But it is not the only proposal that would address the instability created by the megabanks.

There are several other amendments and issues in the House or Senate bills that I would briefly like to address.

First, the Merkley-Levin amendment ending proprietary trading. Because of Republican obstruction, we were denied the opportunity to vote on that proposal to end the reckless Wall Street gambling called proprietary trading. Opponents of this, particularly from across the aisle, went to such great pains to avoid a vote because I think they knew it had strong support.

The Merkley-Levin amendment would strengthen the Volcker rule in Senator DODD's Wall Street reform bill. It would have barred banks and their affiliates from engaging in proprietary trading, which, in layman's language, is the “casino gambling” that has banks selling products to clients with one hand, while betting against the products and their clients with the other hand. That can happen only on Wall Street.

Too many Wall Street banks used their proprietary trading operations to get rich at the expense of their own clients. When those risky bets go bad, American taxpayers are footing the bill. Lehman Brothers' risky bets led to the largest bankruptcy in our Nation's history. Soon thereafter, other Wall Street banks, which also engaged in reckless proprietary trading, brought our economy to the brink of collapse. It is time for Congress to end this self-serving practice where the conflicts of interest are obvious—and dangerous.

Second, Senator LINCOLN's amendment on derivatives. Remember that the five biggest banks control 97 percent of the banking industry's derivatives holdings—five banks, 97 percent. I support Agriculture Committee Chairwoman LINCOLN's proposal, which would separate derivatives dealing from lending at commercial banks.

This provision is important for the same reason as the Merkley-Levin amendment. Sprawling financial institutions increase their lucrative operations at the expense of other more fundamental and traditional banking activities.

Right now, megabank speculation is detracting from their primary job: consumer and small business lending. The fact is, too many banks in New Mexico, Ohio, and all over are simply refusing to lend now. They are not lending the way our economy needs them to do it. This is part of the reason.

The latest report by the Congressional Oversight Panel of TARP, chaired by Elizabeth Warren, looked at how TARP recipients are lending to small businesses. It found that between 2008 and 2009, Wall Street lending portfolios have shrunk by 4 percent, with their small business loan portfolios shrinking by 9 percent. Over the same period, banks' securities holdings increased by almost 23 percent. Traditional lending by the biggest banks, which received 81 percent of government bailout funds, has declined. At the same time, lending to small businesses from medium-size banks, which received 11 percent of the bailout, increased.

Taxpayer-funded assistance, in other words, should not support a bank's gambling, but it should support sound economic growth.

Third, Senator COLLINS' amendment on capital standards was adopted in the Senate bill. It would require the Nation's largest banks to meet, at a minimum, the same capital standards imposed on smaller banks.

Under current law, regulators can often permit large financial institutions to follow more permissive capital standards, while smaller banks are held to a different standard. Capital standards applied equally to all banks would help reduce the risk presented by financial institutions as they grow in size or engage in reckless banking behavior. The principle behind this amendment is sound. Regulators should be empowered to apply and enforce capital standards equally and responsibly—regardless of a bank's size.

Fourth, the amendment Representative PAUL KANJORSKI offered is a provision in the House bill that directs regulators to take action against any financial company that "poses a grave threat to the financial stability or economy of the United States." The grave threat of a large financial institution results from excessive leverage, exposure to other risky institutions, or unstable sources of credit. Because of this provision, Federal regulators could apply stricter prudential standards, limit mergers and acquisitions, and force the selloff of business units and assets.

Finally, there is a provision offered by JACKIE SPEIER in the House which would impose a statutory 15-to-1 leverage ratio on systemically risky banks. Combining this with Senator COLLINS' new capital rule is essential. We tried something like this amendment as part of our larger amendment, with Senator KAUFMAN, in the breaking up of the largest five or six or seven banks.

Placing limits on these banks' leverage—meaning their assets relative to their debt—is critical to ending taxpayer bailouts. They cannot just leverage and leverage, in ratios like Lehman Brothers did, at 30 and 40 to 1. Four of the five largest investment banks were leveraged 30, 35, or 40 to 1 at the time of the financial crisis. That means their assets far outbalanced their ability to cover the debt.

According to the Kansas City Fed, the 20 biggest banks are more highly leveraged than community banks. Because the megabanks are bigger than ever before, bailing them out would cost taxpayers even more than they paid this time.

It is unfair. More important, it is dangerous. The current distortions in the market give privileged, large banks a clear funding advantage. Their implicit government backing is worth up to $34 billion annually. That is Wall Street welfare where large financial institutions continue to receive cheaper rates—maybe 75 basis points is what most economists say—compared to smaller banks.

As the Wall Street reform bill heads into conference, we should not dilute it to appease Wall Street. Wall Street lobbyists are all over this institution—all over the House, all over the Senate. They have already had too much impact on this bill. They have had almost total influence with Republicans. Frankly, they have had too much influence with my political party, too—the Democrats.

We should keep our eye on the ball by stopping financial crises before they start.

I yield the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant editor of the Daily Digest proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ELENA KAGAN NOMINATION

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I want to speak briefly on the President's nomination of Elena Kagan to the Supreme Court. The more we examine her record, the more concerns there are that her legal judgments might be infected by her very liberal political views.

We see strong evidence of that in Ms. Kagan's memos as a clerk on the Supreme Court. In her work as Domestic Policy Adviser in the White House for President Clinton, we see those strong political views. We see strong evidence of this during her time as dean of Harvard Law School.

Perhaps to some in the elite progressive circles of academia it is acceptable to discriminate against the patriots who fight and die for our freedoms, but the vast majority of Americans, I think, correctly know that such behavior is wrong. It has an arrogance about it and, really, it is not ethical.

When Dean Kagan became dean in 2003, she inherited a policy of full, equal access for the military. But she reversed that policy in clear open defiance of Federal law. She kicked the military out of the campus recruitment office as our troops, at that very moment, risked their lives in two wars overseas.

Some have recently attempted to defend this conduct by arguing that she designed to speak with the student veterans to discuss whether they would coordinate a sort of second-class system for the recruiters who would come on campus to seek young men and women to serve as JAG officers. This all happened after she had defied the law and had shut down those official channels of recruitment at the official recruiting office. But the Harvard Student Veterans Association plainly expressed to Ms. Kagan in a letter to the entire law school that they lacked the resources to take the place of the campus office now closed to the military.

The letter reads in part:

Given our tiny membership, meager budget, and lack of any office space, we possess neither the time nor the resources to routinely schedule campus rooms or advertise extensively for outside organizations, as is the norm for most recruiting events.

But Ms. Kagan was unmoved. Instead of welcoming the military recruiters on campus, she punished them, relegating them to second-class status, even leading student veterans to arrange recruiter meetings off campus. In fact, Dean Kagan's public comments contributed to a hostile on-campus environment for both recruiters and student veterans alike. In fact, she said she "abhorred" the military's recruitment policy—blaming soldiers for the decisions of lawmakers—the Congress—and the President. She called it a "moral injustice of the first order," and participated in a student protest opposing military recruiting on campus.

Stunningly, she expressed sympathy for students and faculty for whom she said "the military's presence on campus feels alienating." Those alienated by the military's presence were not the ones who needed the sympathy, they needed a history lesson. They had the freedom to complain and protest from the safety of Harvard's campus because of the blood and sacrifice of the men and women who wear our uniform.

If you talk to student veterans who were on campus during 2004 and 2005, you will learn many of them felt exploited. Here were people who had just returned from battles in Iraq, dodging enemy gunfire, and they were supposed to quietly hustle the military recruiters through the back door and provide political cover for Dean Kagan.

In a report for NPR, one student veteran who was there summed it up this way:

Getting us to carry her water on military recruitment through the back door was a bridge too far. I came to view her as a very smooth political person.

Ms. Kagan said her mistreatment of the military was justified by her view that don't ask, don't tell was a "moral injustice of the first order." But don't ask, don't tell was created and implemented by President Clinton. Where was her outrage during the 5 years she served in the Clinton White House? Why would she blame the military? They didn't pass the rule. It was Congress and the President.

So Ms. Kagan didn't take a stand in Washington when she was here, where the policy was adopted, but waited until she got to Harvard and then stood in the way of hard-working military recruiters who had nothing to do with establishing the policy.

Now information has come to light suggesting that Ms. Kagan may even have been less morally principled in her approach than has been portrayed. Around the same time that Dean Kagan was campaigning to exclude military recruiters—citing what she saw as the evils of don't ask, don't tell—Harvard University accepted $20 million from a member of the Saudi Royal family to establish a center for "Islamic Studies" and Sharia law. An Obama State Department report concerning Saudi Arabia and the Sharia law concept noted:

Under Shari'a as interpreted in [Saudi Arabia] sexual activity between two persons of the same gender is punishable by death or flogging.

Ms. Kagan was perfectly willing to obstruct the military, which has liberated countless Muslims from the hate and tyranny of Saddam Hussein and the Taliban, but it seems she was willing to sit on the sidelines as Harvard created a center funded by—and dedicated to—foreign leaders presiding over a legal system that would violate what would appear to be her position. She fought the ability of our own soldiers to access campus resources but not those who spread the oppressive tenets of Sharia-type law.

Perhaps her response was guided by campus politics, but certainly Ms. Kagan lacks any experience as a judge or as a lawyer, and not much as a scholar of law. She hasn't written much. Much of her career has been spent actively engaged in liberal politics not legal practice, and there are serious questions as to whether she would be able to set aside that political agenda that has defined so much of her career. I think that is the test we try to give a fair evaluation of this nominee.

So these are important issues, and she will have an opportunity to discuss her views. I expect many Americans will be listening closely, but it will be important that any nominee to the Supreme Court be able to assure with great confidence the American people—and this Senate—that if confirmed, he or she would be faithful to the law, to serve under the Constitution, and not above it, and not have their political agenda infect their rulings, which must be nonpolitical.

I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I appreciate my friend from Alabama wrapping up his speech.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 4344 AND 4351

Mr. President, notwithstanding the pendency of a motion to concur, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order for the Senate to now consider the Reid amendment No. 4344 in its current form and the Isakson amendment No. 4351; that the amendments be debated concurrently until 2:45 p.m.; that at 2:45 p.m., the Senate proceed to vote in relation to the Reid amendment, to be followed by a vote in relation to the Isakson amendment; that each amendment be subject to an affirmative 60-vote threshold; that if the amendment achieves that threshold, then it be agreed to and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; that if they do not achieve the threshold, then they be withdrawn; that no amendment be in order to either amendment; that if either amendment is agreed to, then once the Baucus motion to concur has been made, the amendment be considered incorporated in the motion to concur.

I further ask there be 4 minutes between the two votes equally divided.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, my friend from Georgia is here, so I will be very quick. In fact, he can take 3 of the 4 minutes between the votes.

The home buyer credit has been wildly successful in stimulating home purchases. I have heard from a number of Nevadans who have met the April 30 deadline for having a binding contract for a home—and not only Nevadans but all over the country—but are very concerned they will not be able to close their transaction by the end of this month.

The failure to meet the June 30 deadline is not the fault of the home purchaser. Banks, title companies, and closing agents are swamped as a result of the success of this program. Many home buyers are stuck waiting for banks to make decisions on short sales. Unfortunately, the banks making these decisions feel no sense of urgency, leaving home buyers powerless to meet the current deadlines. They simply don't care, as has been shown during this entire period of time. The banks don't care about the home buyers or the homeowners.

My amendment extends the deadline for 3 months. This will give the homeowners time and the home buyers time to close their home purchases. My amendment is fully offset by disallowing a tax deduction for punitive damages paid in connection with a judgment or settlement.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I wanted to take a few minutes today to speak in support of the amendment offered by my dear friend and colleague from Nevada, HARRY REID. I am proud to be cosponsoring this important amendment. Last November we passed, with bipartisan support, an amendment that extended the very successful first time homebuyer tax credit and expanded it to the "move up buyer." My good friend from Georgia, Senator ISAKSON was instrumental in crafting this extended and expanded tax credit and I want to commend him for all the work he has done on this issue. Under that legislation, which we worked on together, homebuyers who were eligible for the credit had to sign a binding contract for their new home by April 30 and close by June 30 to receive the credit.

As of April, the Internal Revenue Service estimates that 2.6 million Americans have used the credit. The National Realtors Association reported that home sales rose by 6 percent between March and April this year as Americans clamored to qualify for the credit. That increase marked the third consecutive month that home sales grew. And that is exactly what this legislation was intended to do—spur home sales and bring the housing market back to life.

There are between 55,000 and 75,000 eligible homebuyers who entered into contracts to purchase a principal residence by April 30, but who will not get the benefit of the homebuyer tax credit because they do not close by June 30. There are a variety of reasons this might occur: the seller is unable to secure a timely approval from their lender for sales related to distressed properties; recent natural disasters have damaged the property; or the homebuyer has experienced delays in the processing of their Federal mortgage program application.

This amendment would extend the closing date deadline from June 30 to September 30 so that these eligible homebuyers can still claim the credit. I want to make very clear that this amendment does not extend the credit to new applicants—they must still meet all the eligibility requirements and be under contract by April 30. This amendment just gives them more time to close the deal.

At the end of the day, this amendment is really about fairness for the thousands of homebuyers who might be ineligible for the credit simply because it is taking longer than usual to complete their paperwork. It is simply unfair to allow homeowners who played by the rules to lose this credit due to administrative challenges beyond their control. I also want to note that this provision is fully paid for by denying corporations the ability to deduct punitive damages from their taxable income. Once again, I thank the majority leader and his staff for crafting this fiscally responsible amendment to help homebuyers. I urge all my colleagues to vote for this amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, I will be brief. This deals with two amendments, and both do the same thing, except for the way in which they are paid for.

I appreciate very much Senator REID's interest in this as the leader. I have worked on this issue, as everybody knows, for a long time. We passed unanimously in the Senate last year a home buyer tax credit which ended on April 30 for contract date. Unfortunately, because of the backlog of appraisals and the current FDIC regulation, a lot of people who qualified for the credit are not going to be able to close by the end of June, and they will lose the credit because we put a June 30 closing date as the deadline for closing the credit earned by the contract of April 30.

Both amendments merely move that June 30 date to the end of September, which gives another 90 days to close the transaction that has already been under contract for 60 days. It ensures Americans they will get what the Senate promised them in terms of the tax credit, if they in fact performed and qualified prior to April 30.

The difference in the two amendments is the pay-for. One is doing away with the deductibility of punitive damages, which is Senator REID's. The other is mine, which takes it from the unspent $50 billion in stimulus money. And the pay-for, by the way, in both cases, is not a lot of money in the scheme of things. It is a lot of money to me and you, but it is $140 million and not $50 billion.

So I would certainly appreciate support for the Isakson amendment, and I appreciate the support of Senators DODD and REID. I yield back the remainder of my time, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the Reid amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a sufficient second? There appears to be a sufficient second.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4351

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there is 4 minutes equally divided on the Isakson amendment No. 4351.

The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, this is a tax credit extension, as with the previous amendment, but with a different pay-for. The previous was deductibility of punitive damages. This one is from the stimulus money. Both accomplish the same thing, which is allowing Americans who qualified for the tax credit by contracting by April 30 to close by September 30 rather than by June 30. The reason we are pushing it forward is because FDIC rules, regulatory rules and appraisal rules, are forcing closings taking as long as 120 days. This doesn't give anybody a credit who hasn't already earned it. It just allows them to take advantage of it by protracting the closing date so they would have enough time to close. I urge a positive vote on the Isakson amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time in opposition?

The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I oppose this amendment. Recovery act money works. It adds to reducing unemployment. It adds to the economy. It is very productive. It is helpful. It makes no sense to cut back recovery dollars that work, that help our economy. I, therefore, strongly oppose the amendment.

Mr. ISAKSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

AMENDMENT NO. 4333

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I rise today to speak on the Thune amendment. This is the Republican alternative. Of course, we now know the Baucus package did not get the 60 votes required to go forward and, therefore, we are now looking at the Republican substitute and waiting for a new bill to come from Senator BAUCUS.

I think it is so important that our Senate say to the American people that we know the debt being created in this country is unsupportable. Our bailouts have skyrocketed, our spending, our borrowing, now taxing—it is more than the American people can stand.

Our national debt now tops $13 trillion. Since President Obama took office 18 months ago the debt has grown by over $2.4 trillion. The President's budget shows there is no end in sight. It doubles the national debt in 5 years and triples it in 10.

In order to sustain this current spending level, the Federal Government is being forced to borrow 40 cents for every dollar it spends this year. The Federal Government is spending 67 percent more than it is earning. This is similar to a household that earns $62,000 but spends $105,000.

From whom are we borrowing that money? We owe China over $900 billion, Japan nearly $800 billion. Every household in America knows what it is like to set a budget. They know what the income is, and they know how to stick with it. It involves setting priorities, making tough decisions, and discipline.

The bill we are debating on the Senate floor today includes important policies that are national priorities, and I support many of them. However, it is time that the Federal Government does what every other household does; that is, pay for our priorities.

Here is what the Thune amendment does. It extends the expiring unemployment provisions until November, the expired tax provisions, including the local and State sales tax deduction through the end of the year. So we know that any of the expired tax cuts that people have been counting on that have been in place for several years would go through the end of this year so people would know that is at least one stabilizing force on which they can count.

It drops the job-killing tax increases in the Baucus substitute. The Thune amendment proves that government can make the tough choices. The Thune amendment is paid for. According to CBO, it cuts taxes by $26 billion, it cuts spending by over $100 billion, and it reduces the deficit by $68 billion over the next 10 years. It shows the American people that this Senate is serious about stopping the deficit spending we have seen in the last 18 months.

Spending cuts in the Thune amendment: one, it rescinds the unobligated stimulus funds; two, it imposes a 5-percent, across-the-board cut in government spending for all Federal agencies except the Veterans' Administration and the Department of Defense; three, it freezes for 1 year Federal employee salaries, including, of course, Congress. It is very important that our Federal employees have the same kinds of restrictions that most Americans are feeling right now. It is a freeze, not a cut, in Federal employee salaries. It requires the selling of $15 billion of unneeded and unused government property.

I believe the doctor fix that we have done in a patchwork way year after year since the balanced budget amendment is now another patch.

Medicare pays doctors in a fundamentally broken way. It has become an access-to-care crisis for our seniors. Too many seniors are unable to find a doctor who takes Medicare because the Federal Government has proven time and again that it is an unreliable business partner. We need a long-term solution so that the best and brightest in our country will choose medicine for their career and will choose to serve Medicare patients. Medicare is supposed to make seniors comfortable that they will be able to get medical care, but so many Medicare patients cannot find good doctors; they can't go to the doctors they want to see because the doctors have just said: I have had enough.

In Texas, over 60 percent of our counties are considered health professional shortage areas. The number of medical school graduates choosing primary care has dropped 50 percent since 1997. Fifteen medical specialties have reported physician workforce shortages, and we could face a physician shortage of more than 150,000 physicians in the next 15 years.

The Thune amendment provides over 2 years of a positive update for our Medicare physicians paid for by the kind of tort reform that has saved Texas doctors so much. The tort reform has brought down insurance premiums in Texas and we have increased our number of doctors since tort reform was enacted.

We could do the same thing at the Federal level, and then the many counties I hear about from my colleagues all over our country that don't have a primary care physician or don't have an OB-GYN physician would be able to start seeing an influx of medical personnel back into the practice of medicine.

We can do something good for America. We can show America that Congress understands that this debt is unsustainable, if we pass the Thune amendment. It is essential that we pass an amendment that will pay for the extension of unemployment insurance, that will not have any more deficit spending and not increase taxes.

We need to continue the cutting of taxes so that our businesses will feel they can hire people, so that we will have an economy that can be sustained without sending more and more money to the Federal Government, which is growing bigger and bigger. We need business to grow, to hire people, to get our economy going again so that all of the sectors, including retail as well as manufacturing, will survive in our country.

It is my hope we can pass the Thune amendment. It is fully paid for, it will not have deficit spending, and it will cut taxes rather than increase taxes on businesses. That is the alternative that we think is important for America to see.

Mr. President, I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant editor of the Daily Digest called the roll.

Mr. BAUCUS. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MOTION TO CONCUR WITH AMENDMENT NO. 4369

(Purpose: In the nature of a substitute)

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, pursuant to the previous order, I move to concur in the House amendment to the Senate amendment to the bill with an amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS] proposes an amendment numbered 4369 to the House amendment to the Senate amendment to H.R. 4213.

Mr. BAUCUS. I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of Amendments.")

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, this is a new substitute amendment. We voted on an earlier version today. This is a new one. It still addresses many of the same issues as the last substitute, but it is smaller. It has fewer dollars involved and it is more paid for. The majority of this amendment is now offset. Most of the dollars spent in this amendment are offset, not by a lot but still the majority—more than half. All of the amendment is offset except for two matters: the unemployment insurance and the aid to the States under Medicaid; that is, the safety net provisions are not offset—those two. Everything else is offset. That means we do pay for changes to how doctors are compensated under Medicare. That is paid for. We do pay for all the changes to the tax laws. They are paid for as well.

We also made changes to the provisions regarding S corporations and carried interest. I will have more to say about those tomorrow, but suffice it to say that the S corp changes address some of the administrative concerns and burdens some Senators had as we were attempting to stop the abuses of some professional S corps, the abuses they have been conducting. Frankly, they have been paying themselves a very small salary. These are professional corporations primarily. Then they pay themselves dividends. Because dividends are not wages, they avoid payroll taxes. They avoid the FICA tax and avoid paying the Medicare tax. That is something we are trying to stop. The substitute still addresses that abuse but in a way that is less burdensome to bona fide S corporations. The carried interest provisions generally soften some of the provisions that were contained in the substitute.

The bottom line is that we listened. Several Senators had some concerns about the earlier substitute. We heard those Senators, and we have adjusted the amendment accordingly.

We believe this amendment can provide a path forward. We believe this amendment can complete our work on this bill. We believe this amendment can help to enact into law help to people who need help, the unemployed, and States under Medicaid and also help create jobs our constituents are demanding. The tax provisions will have that effect.

I very much hope that when we get to the substitute amendment vote, we will get the necessary votes to pass it. I am looking for something above 60, north of 60, so we can move forward to other measures.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

FINANCIAL REFORM

Mr. KAUFMAN. Mr. President, it has only been 2 years since we had an extremely painful financial crisis that almost brought down our entire economy.

To try to address the root cause of the crisis, we are currently nearing completion of a long and arduous process to develop a comprehensive financial reform bill.

The world is watching to see how strong a bill this Congress will produce, and we need to show leadership. Yet I fear that instead of putting in place strong structural reforms as a model for other nations, we are deferring too much to the discretion of regulators who have failed in the past, and to international negotiations—currently underway in Basel, Switzerland—that have all too often resulted in global standards that were the lowest common denominators.

Capital flows easily across borders, and so the United States needs to provide leadership and then produce harmonized global standards. Instead, I fear we are doing the opposite. We have hollowed out our national response so that we can negotiate with a free hand on the global stage—after Congress showed the world that we lack the political resolve to impose hard measures.

This is why we have heard a common refrain that statutory requirements on capital or other prudential standards will tie regulators' hands during these international negotiations. We heard it before on the Brown-Kaufman amendment to restrict the size, leverage, and risk of our megabanks. Now we hear it on the Collins amendment.

Senator COLLINS's commonsense provision would ensure that bank holding companies and systemically significant nonbank financial institutions are subject to capital and leverage requirements as stringent as those that insured depository institutions face under existing prompt corrective action regulations. This provision would raise the capital bar for our largest financial institutions, requiring them to hold more committed and reliable forms of capital; namely, common equity and retained earnings. As my colleagues will recall, it passed by a voice vote during the Senate debate.

Now there is the threat that the Collins amendment might be eliminated for the sake of “international negotiations.” Mr. President, I fear this is a recipe for a global race to the bottom for two reasons: First, a tepid response by the United States may also undermine other countries’ consideration of tough reform measures. For example, the U.K. is studying whether to break up their megabanks. But some in the U.K. have suggested that since the United States isn’t taking this preemptive action, the U.K. would not do it either.

Second, some countries’ regulators appear to be wedded to the status quo, and we are only reinforcing the impression that tough measures are not needed. Remarkably, only weeks before the European Government and the IMF cobbled together an almost $1 trillion bailout of European megabanks, one French Government official stated:

The situation is completely different here, and the system that was in place has not worked badly and does not need to be overhauled.

Regulators from Germany, France, and Japan, among others, are opposed to having a leverage requirement and a more strict definition of what constitutes capital.

Leaving aside the opposition of many countries to the very concept of a leverage capital requirement, there are those who still indicate that the quantitative requirement must be set through the Basel negotiations. In fact, Treasury Secretary Geithner said:

By the end of this year, we will negotiate an international consensus on the new ratios.

Why does it strengthen our negotiating hand for the Congress to have failed to enact hard rules? Moreover, it is tougher to imagine how we can set a number on leverage when we don’t even have an agreement on how to measure leverage, since the United States follows GAAP accounting standards while the rest of the world follows IFRS. It is unlikely we will have uniformity, or even harmonization of those rules, for many years—if we ever will at all. While the accounting standard issue is often overlooked, it should go without saying that it is a more basic and first-order problem.

Most important, for what are we negotiating? The history of international capital standards is that of colossal failures—Basel I, Basel II, and now Basel III. Instead, we have a sovereign banking failure and should be establishing a sovereign solution.

If other countries want to permit banks to become risky and fail—such as what Europe may be facing due to the European debt crisis—let them learn the hard lessons America has already learned.

Let me briefly review the history of the Basel accords, which should stiffen the resolve of the conference negotiators to include measures that will prevent another financial crisis caused by U.S. megabanks.

The Basel I Accord was a crude apparatus that established numerical requirements for the amount of capital that banks need to set aside based upon how risky the assets on their balance sheets were perceived to be. Different types of loans and assets were lumped into risk buckets. Some received lower risk weights, while others received higher risk weights. However, those weightings were arbitrary determinations that did not even take into account basic risks—most notably credit risk—associated with loans and other financial assets that banks hold.

Under the Basel I system, a bond issued by a blue chip AAA company such as Johnson & Johnson would have had a much higher risk weight than a subprime stated-income loan, a loan to Greece, or a loan to Lehman Brothers. Not surprisingly, banks were able to easily game—or arbitrage—these capital requirements in a way that generally increased their risk profile. Banks were able to cherry-pick high-risk, and therefore, high-return assets that had low capital requirements because of the risk bucket in which they were placed. Banks also got around the Basel I requirements by shifting more assets off their balance sheets.

The Basel II Accord, which was agreed to in 2004, was the culmination of several years of negotiations. While it was intended to address the flaws of Basel I by making capital requirements more risk sensitive, it actually created bigger problems.

Most notably, the accord’s complexity and sophistication masked a deregulatory philosophy that sought to make determinations on capital adequacy dependent on the judgments of rating agencies and, increasingly, the banks’ own internal models. By outsourcing their regulatory responsibilities to the banks that they were supposed to regulate, bank regulators were making an implicit admission that the size and complexity of the megabanks had exceeded their comprehension.

Unfortunately, complex capital standards that rely upon banks’ own internal models pose serious problems for any democratic nation that prizes accountability and transparency, such as the United States. In his book

“Banking on Basel,” Federal Reserve Governor Daniel Tarullo provides an exhaustive account of the Basel II capital accord that specifically questions the accord’s decision to base capital standards on the internal ratings of banks. Tarullo indicates that the “very complexity of the [accord’s] approach gives banks more opportunities to manipulate, or make mistakes during, calculation of their capital ratios.”

Even more troubling, Governor Tarullo noted it would also be nearly impossible for any independent auditor or examiner to identify failures and forbearance on the part of regulators. To that point, he states “it may be extremely difficult for an independent entity such as the Government Accountability Office to reconstruct the series of decisions and judgments that went into the creation and supervisory assessment of the credit risk model.” Given that, how will we in Congress be able to hold either the megabanks or their regulators accountable?

By virtually all accounts, the Basel II Accord was a complete failure. The Basel Committee itself estimated that it reduced capital for some banks by as much as 29 percent, at a time in which regulators should have been ramping up capital and other prudential requirements upon banks.

By trying to tie capital requirements to so-called risk-based measurements, the Federal Reserve—the main driver of the Basel process—apparently hoped to eliminate the basic leverage requirement. In fact, former Fed Governor Susan Bies told banks that “the leverage ratio down the road has got to disappear.” Fortunately, despite the Fed’s objections, Basel II has not been implemented in the United States, in large part due to concerns that it would disadvantage smaller community banks that did not have the resources and wherewithal to make investments in supposedly advanced risk models.

It was, however, applied to European banks. Unconstrained by a basic leverage capital ratio, many of these banks went on to arbitrage the Basel requirements by gorging on AAA-rated bonds backed by subprime mortgages, not to mention the sovereign debt of highly indebted Eurozone countries such as Greece and Spain. The result has been hundreds of billions of dollars of losses followed by both explicit and implicit bailouts by EU governments.

The accord was also effectively applied to investment banks such as Lehman Brothers and Goldman Sachs, which had precarious and explosive business models that utilized overnight funding to finance illiquid inventories of assets. These institutions were nominally regulated by the SEC, which had no track record to speak of with respect to ensuring the safety and soundness of financial institutions. The Commission allowed these investment banks to leverage a small base of capital over 40 times—I repeat, over 40 times—into asset holdings that, in some cases, exceeded $1 trillion.

Of course, in the wake of the most recent crisis, the same failed regulators now tell us that, this time, they have learned their lesson and will develop a new agreement that will address the deficiencies of the last one. But what reasons do we have for thinking that will be true?

Assistant Treasury Secretary Michael Barr notes that regulators are now pushing for new global capital standards that will be “more robust, higher and better quality, less pro-cyclical, and include global agreement on a leverage ratio.” But the megabanks are already developing new ways to arbitrage as well as weaken the global capital standards to which Secretary Barr refers. In other words, they are finding ways to gut and go around the rules before they are even finalized.

What is more, many of the regulators involved in the discussions inspire little confidence. Christian Noyer, the governor of the Bank of France and the new chairman of the Bank of International Settlements, the entity that oversees the Basel rulemaking process, indicated, that the new rules “shouldn’t undermine the business model of banks which have perfectly withstood the crisis.” Given that the same Bank of International Settlements estimates that eurozone banks have two-thirds of the exposures to the most fiscally imperiled European countries—Greece, Ireland, Portugal and Spain—it is not clear to which banks Governor Noyer is referring.

As the Financial Times notes, France, Germany and Japan are “more attached to the preeminence of the current risk-based approach and wants the leverage ratio to have a much less important role in governing banks’ balance sheets.” In effect, they are pushing for the status quo of Basel II, which has been an unmitigated disaster. After the multiple trillions of dollars worth of public funds expended on megabank bailouts, it seems amazing that many regulators would like to maintain a system where the largest banks effectively regulate themselves.

But U.S. regulators are not immune to the defense of the existing regime. As the Wall Street Journal reports, “some U.S. government officials are fighting what they view as an anti-American proposal that would prevent banks from counting as part of their capital cushion a specific type of security favored by U.S. banks known as a trust-preferred security.” In other words, we have unnamed U.S. regulators that are fighting against Senator COLLINS’ amendment in international negotiations.

The current state of international capital negotiations gives little comfort to those who would like to see fundamental structural reforms to address the problem of too big to fail.

I am in favor of international negotiations to harmonize financial regulatory standards. However, these negotiations should not preclude the Congress from setting statutory floors. They should never result in the abdication of our sovereign powers and responsibilities.

I, therefore, agree with the sage thoughts of former Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker when he said that while “good things may come out of the Basel process, ‘it is not structural change.’” In his view, and in mine, we need to do both.

Instead of trusting our financial stability solely to unelected financial guardians, in this country and abroad, Congress should legislate structural and fundamental reforms that preemptively address the persistent problem of too big to fail. Senator COLLINS’ provision is but one example of that. There is also Senator LINCOLN’s proposal to require swap dealers to be spun off and separately capitalized from insured depository institutions; a strong Volcker Rule ban on proprietary trading at banks, as proposed by Senators MERKLEY and LEVIN.

Without transparency and accountability, a democracy cannot function. That is why we still need the statutory standards on the leverage as well as the size of these megabanks. While some technocrats may say that they are blunt tools, I say that that is precisely the point. They will not only provide a sorely needed gut check that ensures that regulators do not miss the forest for the trees when assessing the capital adequacy of a financial institution, they will also provide a basic means to ensure accountability in the performance of government officials.

We cannot—we cannot—afford another meltdown and the American people—and, indeed, the rest of the world—are looking to Congress to take steps to ensure that that does not happen. By adopting these fundamental reforms and preemptive measures, Congress will go a long way towards protecting the American people from future bailouts. It will also be providing global leadership, demonstrating to the rest of the world that fundamental reform of our financial system does not rest upon the decisions of unelected technocrats whose grand designs brought our financial system to the brink.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, I rise tonight to express my concern with how Congress continues to address this package of so-called extenders. This is a debate we have had on multiple occasions this year, and once again we find ourselves discussing how to enact a short-term extension of items such as emergency unemployment benefits, reauthorization of the National Flood Insurance Program, the Federal Medicaid matching rate, FMAP, and the Medicare doc fix.

This is a difficult debate for many of us. Times are tough across the country, as well as in my home State of Georgia where the unemployment rate is 10.4 percent. During a time of economic hardship, I do not believe we should allow provisions, such as the extension of emergency unemployment benefits, to expire. But I do believe that when we extend these programs, we should do so in a responsible fashion. Congress should find a way to pay for those extensions.

That is where there is disagreement on this issue—not whether Congress should pass an extenders package but whether it should be paid for.

Even though the need for these extensions comes as no surprise, we again find ourselves in a position where the majority has proposed extending these programs without finding the money to fund them.

Just 2 weeks after our Federal debt topped $13 trillion—let me say that one more time; $13 trillion is owed by the United States of America today—we are now poised to vote on another proposal that would spend money this country simply does not have.

That number, $13 trillion, is so big that it is difficult to comprehend. But what it boils down to is $42,000 of debt for every single citizen of the United States of America.

The public debt has risen by $2.4 trillion in the 500 days since the current administration took office. That is an average of $4.9 billion per day. We are now borrowing 43 cents of every dollar we spend. But still we are continuing to spend.

Estimates show that $4.8 trillion of the $9 trillion in debt that America will accrue over the next decade will be from interest. That is $4.8 trillion that could be better used on national defense or returned to taxpayers to pay for other necessities. Instead, future generations will be forced to pay higher taxes to foot the bill for Congress’s out-of-control spending.

With much of our national debt being held by other nations, such as China, this is also an issue of national security. Just as with our energy and food supply, we put our Nation in a more vulnerable position when we disproportionately rely on other countries.

It is a matter of great concern that our Nation is in deep debt to foreign countries that often do not share our positions on domestic or international policy matters. While our global economy ensures that there will be foreign investment in our debt, this sustained, exploding debt guarantees that we provide leverage to our creditors. At some point, we have to say enough is enough and make some tough decisions about spending beyond our means. Again, we can pass an extenders package without recklessly adding to the cost of our Federal debt.

Earlier this year, this body voted to give the rule known as pay-go the force of law. And yet virtually every piece of legislation that we have considered between then and now has fallen short of this standard. Talking about fiscal responsibility and restraint while spending recklessly is hypocrisy of which the American people will surely take notice, and they have taken notice. States as well are being left in the fiscal lurch.

By not shoring up the Federal Medicaid matching rate, my State of Georgia will have a $370.5 million hole in its budget. We have had to make sacrifices at home. My legislature has had to make very difficult, hard, and tough decisions with respect to trying to find reductions in spending at the State level to come up with a fiscally responsible, and balanced budget that they are required to have under our State constitution.

We know States are facing huge challenges, relying as they do on money promised from the Federal Government. But we all need to keep in mind that we are borrowing virtually every cent of that money. It is time we get serious about this Nation's precarious fiscal situation. We can no longer afford to burden our grandchildren with insurmountable debt.

Recently, we witnessed what happens when a nation does not live within its means. The economic crisis in Greece was caused by years of unbridled spending and failure to implement fiscal reforms. This recklessness left Greece badly exposed when the global economic downturn appeared. This pattern should serve as a wake-up call to every one of us that spending must be controlled.

Retirement programs such as Medicare and Social Security are on the verge of bankruptcy. In March of this year, reports emerged that Social Security is set to pay out more in benefits than it receives in payroll taxes this year—a threshold the program was not expected to cross until at least 2016. By some estimates, the program will no longer be able to pay retirees full benefits by the year 2037.

Instead of trying to place programs such as Social Security on more stable footing, we spent more than a year debating a health care bill that will create even more costly entitlement programs, the true price tag of which is yet to be seen.

The original proposal that was debated and voted on earlier today, advanced by the majority, increased spending by $126 billion, which included more than $70 billion in new taxes and increased the deficit by $79 billion over the next 10 years. Thank goodness the votes were not there to proceed with that underlying bill.

Now, according to the chairman of the Finance Committee, we have a new bill. While it is smaller in dollars, according to the comments made by the chairman of the Finance Committee earlier tonight—he says also that the majority of the amendment is offset, which means it is still not paid for.

We have an opportunity tomorrow to take a step toward responsibility and restraint by paying for this extenders package. I am a cosponsor of the amendment introduced by the Senator from South Dakota, Mr. THUNE, which would extend the same programs as the House-passed version of this legislation. But unlike that version, the Thune amendment pays for those programs instead of adding their cost to the Federal debt. It also cuts taxes by $26 billion, cuts spending by more than $100 billion, and, according to the CBO, reduces the deficit by $55 billion. It does this through spending cuts and the use of unobligated stimulus funds.

The Thune amendment does away with the harmful tax increases on long-term investment that are part of the underlying bill. These taxes on carried interest would almost certainly serve to discourage capital investment, increase borrowing costs associated with starting or growing businesses, and hurt real estate and stock prices, all at a time when our economy is extremely vulnerable. The real estate and venture capital arena—two segments of our economy that are vital to sustained job growth—would be especially hard hit by these taxes on long-term investments.

Many Americans need the programs in this bill to be extended, but we must be sure we extend them in a responsible way, and that is why I urge my colleagues to strongly consider the Thune amendment as we debate it tomorrow and vote in favor of the Thune amendment.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

CHILD SOLDIERS

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, in December of 2008, the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act became law. The act includes a provision that I put in the bill with Senator SAM BROWNBACK, Republican of Kansas, to address the problem of child soldiers, specifically the Child Soldier Prevention Act.

The goal of this language was simple and straightforward: U.S. military assistance should not go to finance the use and exploitation of children in armed conflict. The law not only expresses American values by rejecting any use of child soldiers by foreign governments, but also provides leverage through our Foreign Military Assistance Program to encourage governments to address this heinous practice.

Moreover, under the Child Soldiers Accountability Act and Human Rights Enforcement Act, it is unlawful to knowingly provide material support to the use of child soldiers. Tragically, according to Amnesty International, hundreds of thousands of children around the world are still being used as child soldiers. These boys and girls wield automatic weapons on the front lines of combat. They serve as human mine detectors. They participate in suicide missions. They carry supplies, they act as spies, messengers, lookouts, and sex slaves. They endanger their own health and the lives of others and sacrifice their childhood in the process.

As chairman of the Judiciary Committee's Human Rights and the Laws Subcommittee, one of the first hearings we held was focused on the scourge of child soldiers. We heard moving testimony from a remarkable young man named Ishmael Beah. Mr. Beah is a former child soldier from Sierra Leone and author of the best-selling book, "A Long Way Gone: Memoirs of a Boy Soldier."

Some Americans may recall this book because it was featured at Starbucks for a long period of time. You find it at bookstores as well. I will never forget what Mr. Beah told the Human Rights Subcommittee, and I want to quote him. Here is what he said:

When you go home tonight to your children, your cousins, and your grandchildren, and watch them carrying out their various childhood activities, I want you to remember that at that same moment, there are countless children elsewhere who are being killed, injured; exposed to extreme violence and forced to serve in armed groups, including girls who are raped . . . As you watch your loved ones, those children you adore most, ask yourselves whether you would want these kinds of suffering for them. If you don't, then you must stop this from happening to other children around the world whose lives and humanity are as important and of the same value as all children everywhere.

We have a moral obligation to respond to Mr. Beah's challenge. Children suffer high mortality, disease, and injury rates that are higher in combat situations than adults. The lasting effects of war and abuse remain with them long after the shooting stops. Both girls and boys are stigmatized and traumatized by their experience, and left with neither family connections nor skills to allow them to transition successfully to productive adult life.

Over the last decade, 2 million children have died in armed conflict—10 years, 2 million children died in armed conflict, 6 million injured.

Further troubling is that children have served as soldiers for governments that have in the past received the assistance of the U.S. Government. With the passage of the Child Soldier Prevention Act, my hope was that this practice would come to an end.

Imagine my surprise when I saw on the front page of the New York Times this week that Somalia's transitional federal government, which the U.S. supports financially as part of its larger counterterrorism strategy, is brazenly using child soldiers. Mr. President, I know you have a young son and you probably saw this photograph. But imagine, if you will, two young boys, identified in this photograph in Somalia, 12-year-old Adan Ugas, and 15-year-old Ahmed Hassan, holding automatic military weapons and working for the transitional Federal Government of Somalia.

When I was a little boy, 12, 10, we used to play with guns, but they were all toys. This is the real thing. These are children. As Ishmael Beah said: Try to picture your son or daughter in that situation, their childhood robbed and scarred for life from being drawn into horrific violence.

The fact that they are working for a military financed by the United States is appalling. In fact, according to human rights groups and the United Nations, the Somali Government is fielding hundreds of children on the front lines, some as young as 9 years old. A Somali Government official quoted in the Times article said: We were trying to find anyone who could carry a gun.

I read that article. It talked about these little boys who, the guns were so heavy, they were switching the strap from one shoulder to the next. They were talking about these little boys with these automatic weapons challenging people in vehicles to stop or they would shoot them.

They asked one of these little boys: What do you really love in life? He said: I love my gun. A Somali Government official acknowledged the fact that this is happening, an official of a government which we are supporting.

I understand Somalia is in a difficult neighborhood in the world, and one of the most dangerous places. It is trying to emerge from years of lawlessness, and the fledgling government does need support. I have met with refugees who have fled the chaos of Somalia in hopes of a better life.

In fact, this last Saturday I met with refugees in Chicago from Somalia. But the law is clear. American tax dollars must not be used to fund the use of child soldiers. Period. I urge the Department of State and the Department of Defense to immediately halt the U.S. support for any such activities and to work with the Somali Government to terminate the use of child soldiers, and reintegrate these children back into a normal, peaceful family life.

I have written our Secretary of State, Hillary Clinton, and urged her to recognize that though the Somali transitional government is trying to bring some measure of stability to their war-torn country, it should not do so on the backs of its most precious commodity, its children, and certainly not with the help of American taxpayers.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter to Secretary Clinton on this topic.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUNE 16, 2010.

Secretary of State HILLARY CLINTON,
Department of State, Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY CLINTON: I write with great concern over a June 14 report in the New York Times that U.S. military financing to the Somali Transitional Federal Government is being used to pay for the use of child soldiers. Such assistance would appear to be in violation of the Child Soldier Prevention provision of the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2008 which prohibits U.S. military assistance to governments of a country that use child soldiers. Moreover, under the Durbin-Coburn Child Soldiers Accountability Act and the Durbin-Coburn Human Rights Enforcement Act, it is unlawful to knowingly provide material support to the use of child soldiers.

As you know, the tragic use of child soldiers continues to a problem around the world. Amnesty International estimates that globally more than 250,000 children are fighting in active conflicts. These young boys and girls fight on front lines of combat, serve as human mine detectors, participate in suicide missions, carry supplies, and act as spies, messengers, lookouts, and sex slaves—endangering their health and lives. Quite simply, they are robbed of their childhoods.

Furthermore, the lasting effects of war and abuse remain with them for years—too often for a lifetime. Former child soldiers are stigmatized and traumatized by their experience and left with neither family connections nor skills to allow them to transition successfully into productive adult lives. We should be doing everything we can to not only end military support for governments that engage in this troubling practice, but to also help such children reintegrate into their families and society.

I recognize that the Somali Transitional Federal Government is trying to bring some measure of stability to that war torn country. However, it should not do so on the backs of its precious children, and certainly not with the help of the American taxpayer.

Thank you for looking into this matter.

Sincerely,

RICHARD J. DURBIN,
U.S. Senator.

INTERCHANGE FEES

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I will be brief because I see my friend from Iowa is on the floor here. I want to give him a chance to speak.

The Federal Government pays interchange fees when people use credit and debit cards to pay for things such as admission to national parks, groceries, at military commissaries, tickets on Amtrak, and copays for VA medical services. In fiscal year 2007, our Federal Government paid $433 million in credit card fees. The vast majority were interchange fees.

Last year, the Appropriations Subcommittee on Financial Services and General Government, which I chair, asked the Treasury Department to look into how much money taxpayers are paying to credit card companies for the use of credit cards. We got the report this week. It concludes that Treasury could save at least $36 to $39 million a year if it did several things, such as negotiating the actual interchange rates charged to the Federal Government.

We had a hearing today, and an employee of the Department of the Treasury came and testified and said the Federal Government of the United States was unable to negotiate an interchange fee with either Visa or MasterCard. The card companies refuse to negotiate. There is $8 billion in economic activity with the Treasury through the credit and debit cards of these two companies. But they refuse to negotiate with the Federal Government.

We also learned that one major company, MasterCard, charges an interchange fee of 1.55 percent on every government transaction, plus 10 cents, while the going rate on an interchange fee for supermarkets across America is 1.27. It turns out that our Federal Government is paying more to the credit card companies than supermarkets are paying in Illinois, Iowa, or Alaska.

You ask yourself: Well, why is that? Is there a high default rate from the Federal Government? The answer is no. The Federal Government pays. And yet we are being charged a higher rate. But let me say for a moment, it is not "we" who are being charged a higher rate, it is the taxpayers. The taxpayers of this country are subsidizing credit card companies by paying higher fees than commercial businesses for the use of credit cards.

It is inexcusable, it is indefensible. You know the debate we had—I know, Mr. President, you recall it personally, a few weeks ago—about whether these credit card companies are going to be held to charging reasonable and proportional amounts for the use of debit cards.

What we are finding at Amtrak, at the VA, and at commissaries across America, is our Federal taxpayers are underwriting these credit card companies.

I tried, when I brought this amendment to the floor of the Senate relative to interchange fees, to do everything in my power to preserve the ability of small banks and credit unions to compete with big banks in issuing debit cards. My amendment does nothing to disadvantage those small financial institutions. We specifically exempted any financial institution with a value of less than $10 billion. As a result, only 3 credit unions out of 1,000 in America were covered by my amendment, and about 80 or 90 banks out of the 8- or 9,000 in this country.

I heard from one of my colleagues on the Senate floor today from the Midwest, who said: The credit unions were in last week. They are frightened by your amendment.

I said: Are they over $10 billion in value?

No, not even close.

Well, the amendment doesn't apply to them.

They are afraid the big credit card companies, Visa and MasterCard, will reduce their interchange fees on small banks and credit unions if the Durbin amendment passes in the Wall Street reform bill.

It is an indication to all of us of the power of these credit card companies to terrorize credit unions and community banks. They have become the messengers of the big banks and credit cards to kill the amendment we passed in the Senate.

By exempting 99 percent of banks from debit and interchange regulation, my amendment would actually enable these banks to receive more interchange revenue than their big bank competitors. Yet the so-called Independent Community Bankers of America and the Credit Union National Association oppose the amendment. Why? An article out of Reuters came out yesterday that makes it plain.

The article is titled "Small Banks Fight Card Fee Limits Despite Exemption." The article says:

Small banks believe they have no choice but to support Visa and Mastercard in a battle against lawmakers over fees for processing debit card transactions.

Why do the small banks believe this? The article continues:

The Durbin amendment explicitly exempts banks with less than $10 billion of assets, so smaller banks in theory should not oppose the law. But the exemption is cold comfort to small banks, which say that whatever the law stipulates, Visa and Mastercard will force them to accept the same fees as larger banks.

I want to make it clear what I have said before, last week in a meeting of the Senate Judiciary Committee, the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice testified that they are investigating Visa and MasterCard now. Nothing more was said, but they confirmed press accounts that that is being done.

I think it is long overdue. This duopoly, this power in the market, this ability to terrorize credit unions and small banks is an indication of too much power and too little competition. If we truly believe in a free market and an entrepreneurial society, we have to support competition. In this case, merchants, businessmen, small banks, and small credit unions are being terrorized by these powerful interests.

The article quotes Jason Kratovil, vice president of congressional relations for the Independent Community Bankers of America, saying that "Visa and MasterCard have 'probably not directly' told small banks that they will receive lower fees," but that it is "pretty clear, at least for our guys, that it's going to end up with one rate for all issuers."

So Visa and MasterCard are arguing: If we have to lower the interchange fees for the biggest banks in America, then we will lower them for the smallest banks in America—even though they are exempt under the Durbin amendment. Visa has 122 different interchange fees and MasterCard well over 100. To argue they can't come up with two different interchange fees, that it is impossible, is ridiculous.

It is the kind of thing where these credit unions and small banks have been terrorized by Visa and MasterCard. The Independent Community Bankers say Visa and MasterCard have "probably not directly" threatened to voluntarily lower small bank interchange rates, but the message received was "pretty clear." It is obvious what is going on: Visa and MasterCard are making threats if this amendment becomes law, they will use their market power against small banks by voluntarily lowering their interchange rates.

It is a great tactic that scares the small banks and credit unions into lobbying against the amendment which passed in the Senate. I am sure the big banks couldn't have more fun than to watch the smaller banks, exempt under our amendment, do their bidding. The big banks hate the thought of my amendment passing, giving small banks an advantage in the debit card market. The small banks are just being played like marionettes when it comes to their role in this lobbying efforts.

I sent the CEOs of Visa and MasterCard a letter and told them this: My amendment protects small banks, but you are threatening to take steps on your own to disadvantage them. If you collude with each other or with the big banks to disadvantage small banks, you could run afoul of the antitrust laws.

Visa and MasterCard wrote back yesterday and said: No, Senator, we wouldn't want to do anything to hurt small banks, but the market may just force us if your amendment becomes law.

This is ridiculous. With Visa and MasterCard having 100 percent of the market for signature debit cards, they are the market. The market is going to force them? Guess what. They are the market. They set the rules. They fix all the fees now. Small banks and credit unions are so afraid of Visa and MasterCard—they are quivering—and their big bank allies, they do not believe they can support any regulation of the interchange system no matter how reasonable. Small banks are afraid to take the risk that these giant corporations might decide to wield their enormous market power against them.

Ironically, that is the world in which small businesses, merchants, and other acceptors of payment cards live today. Small businesses have no choice today but to accept Visa and MasterCard and the fees and rules they establish.

Today at my hearing, Wendy Chronister of Springfield, IL, my hometown, who is CEO of the Qik-n-EZ convenience stores, about 11 of them in central Illinois, came and testified. I know her family well. They live a few doors away from me. I know her dad who started the company 40 years ago. She is a spectacular young woman who is the CEO of this small company that has these convenience stores.

The No. 1 cost in her business is labor, the No. 3 cost is utility bills, and the No. 2 cost is interchange fees to Visa and MasterCard. They represent about half of the charges they pay for labor and represent about twice as much as they pay for utility bills. That is how big a factor this is in a small business. She has no power to negotiate, no power to compete. She is at a loss.

She was sitting at the table with a representative of the Federal Government who said we are in the same boat. We do $8 billion a year accepting cards from Visa and MasterCard and cannot get them to negotiate with us a lower interchange fee for the sake of taxpayers and reducing the deficit. That is the kind of power they have.

I am going to wrap up because I see Senator GRASSLEY is anxious.

When I heard this argument today that the Federal Government was unable to get Visa and MasterCard to negotiate an interchange fee, they are so powerful, these private companies, I had a flashback—a flashback to one of my favorite movies of all time. It was released in about 1963 or 1964. It is entitled “Dr. Strangelove.” In this movie, Peter Sellers played three different roles, and one of the roles was as a British military officer named Lionel Mandrake. He was at a base where they thought another world war was about to break out, a nuclear conflict. He was trying to find a telephone to call someone in Washington to bring an end to this nuclear war. At that point actor Keenan Wynn came in playing the role of COL Bat Guano. Sellers said to Colonel Guano: I need change to make a phone call to Washington to stop this world war.

Colonel Guano said: I don’t have any change.

Peter Sellers said: You shoot up with your gun the Coca-Cola machine, and I will take the money out and make the phone call.

He said: You want me to shoot up the Coca-Cola machine. I will do it, but you are going to have to answer to Coca-Cola for this.

That is what I was reminded of today when I heard that our Federal Government, with $8 billion in business with Visa and MasterCard, can’t get them to sit down at the table. That shows the power of these private companies.

What is going on here? This isn’t competition. They are not some sainted entity. They represent a business, and they are supposed to be a competitive business with the other credit card companies. But they are not. They are dictating fees to small businesses that are hurting, reducing their profitability and their employment at a time when we desperately need jobs.

Small banks should come to understand the predicament that their colleagues in the small business community face, as both live in a world that is too often run by card networks and big banks. It is time for the interchange system to change. We need to end this system where Visa and MasterCard have the market power to set fees and establish rules however they want.

I extend my apologies to Senator GRASSLEY. If I had known he had to leave, I would have wrapped up a lot earlier and saved my comments about “Dr. Strangelove” for a later time. I thank him very much. He has been a good friend and patient.

AGGRESSIVE OILSPILL RESPONSE

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, America is facing a catastrophe in the gulf. I rise today to speak about the President’s address to our Nation last night and my recent trip to the gulf.

I agree with the President that BP must stop the leak, clean up the oil, and end the economic hurricane they have caused on the gulf coast. I agree that BP—not the taxpayers—must be liable for costs of cleaning up the mess, for compensating businesses, fisherman and families, and for their economic losses. BP must set aside a fund of $20 billion or more today that they don’t control to pay all economic claims in a fair and timely way.

I like that the President focused on the Nation’s long range energy needs. We do need to move our energy policy forward. And I am so pleased the President picked Dr. Don Boesch for the new National Commission to prevent and respond to future spills like this one. Dr. Boesch has strong ties to Maryland. He has been president of UMD Center for Environmental Science since 1990 and serves as Governor O’Malley’s science adviser. He’s also a man of Louisiana, born in New Orleans and a graduate of Tulane. He knows the issues of Louisiana and he’s got a special place in his heart in looking out for Maryland.

I also agree with Billy Nungesser, president of Plaquemines Parish, LA. He believes we should bring every asset we have to fight this thing. The people of Louisiana need to see more action on the ground and we can’t just rely on BP’s word to get the job done.

We need to organize and mobilize our own government. Right now we are acting like a bureaucracy rather than a fighting force to protect the beaches and the people from the consequences of the oilspill. I hope in the coming days, the President will insist on defining what success is.

This administration needs goals and metrics for shore clean up that will be adequate. They must establish a mechanism for monitoring, oversight and relentless follow-through. Right now, no one but BP knows what is going on. There has been a lot of reporting on inputs—but not enough on outcomes. We need structure for oversight and we need to know the outcomes of our actions.

The President also needs to insist on expediting permits. When I was on the gulf coast last week, I heard from locals that their ideas on how to protect coasts are stuck in bureaucracy. We need to unstuck the bureaucracy. This is a national emergency that needs an aggressive national response. We are all in this together.

I went to the gulf coast as chair of the Commerce, Justice, Science Appropriations Subcommittee, which funds the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, NOAA. NOAA is in the gulf right now telling us where this oil is going, helping to cleanup the shores and marshes and assisting fishermen who are hurting.

I also went as the Senator from Maryland. I wanted to talk to scientists first hand to find out how the spill could impact Maryland. Will it affect our beaches and treasured Chesapeake Bay?

Last week, I saw the catastrophe in the gulf. We met the people, we saw the beaches, and we saw the impact on the wildlife. And everywhere we went, we saw oil and the consequences of oil. I spoke to people whose livelihoods depend on the gulf. When we talk about what we saw—words like “Louisiana,” “Grand Isle” and “Pelican Island”—I also think of words like “Ocean City” and “Assateague,” Maryland’s own barrier island. What we saw was the good, the bad, and the ugly.

First, we met with the people, and I saw just how resilient they are. They have real grit and are determined to do something to save their communities. We coastal people need to be on their side. We saw communities where they would ordinarily have thousands of visitors with busy fishing charters. Now, it’s like a ghost land. The beach looked more like a military base than an ocean resort, with trucks going up and down, carrying booms and all kinds of response equipment. And when you go out to sea, on a boat or in a helicopter, you see this oil creeping closer and closer to the shoreline. We are concerned about the environmental impact, but we are also concerned about the human impact on lives, livelihoods, and safety.

Next, we asked—is the oil going to come up the east coast in this so-called “loop current or loop stream?” We were told the beaches of Ocean City will be safe. Even in the worst case scenario, the oil won’t get beyond the Carolinas. Second, we were told that the seafood is safe. It is being inspected locally by NOAA and the FDA, so what is coming to the American marketplace is safe. That’s what we were told, but I believe what Ronald Reagan said: “Trust, but verify.”

Maryland’s economy is tied to the Louisiana economy. Our seafood restaurants and markets rely on what’s caught in the gulf. I am holding a Maryland delegation meeting to make sure that we bring in ocean scientists and seafood inspectors to verify that our Atlantic coast beaches and our Chesapeake Bay will stay oil free and our seafood will be safe to eat.

That was the good news. The bad news is BP. The BP people have to fix this. BP is cutting corners, minimizing the situation, and now here we are. The oil will continue to gush, and it will gush until August. But the oil coming out of the well will take 6 weeks to get to shore, so we are going to feel all of this well into September. And that is the best case scenario.

I support our President in calling for an escrow account for BP to put $20 billion aside for economic damages. I fear the hoarders will take charge. I fear BP will file for bankruptcy and will want the taxpayers to bail them out. The American taxpayer will not bail out the oil companies. The oil companies must put aside the money to pay damages and cleanup costs.

Our own bureaucracy needs reform. We saw the can-do spirit there among the people, but the permit process is slow—whether it is the EPA, Corps of Engineers or NOAA. This needs to be reformed. And this stuff, called dispersants sounds like if you pour chemicals on the oil the oil will disburse and everything's fine. I am concerned that dispersants could be causing more problems than they are solving. I am concerned about the toxic impact on human beings and marine life creating dead zones off the coast of Louisiana.

That is why I plan to hold a hearing. To learn more about the effects of these dispersants—what do we already know, what do we need to know, and what research needs to be done—because I don't want dispersants to turn out to be the DDT or Agent Orange of the oilspill. It is our job in Congress to push the bureaucracy, to push BP to get the job done and protect the American people.

Then, we saw the ugly. The so-called protective booms were dysfunctional and in disarray, saturated with sticky smelly oil that had been there for days and no one had come to pick them up or clean them up. They were breaking loose and some washed up in marshes, causing far more damage than the oil. If they couldn't protect the few miles around the pelicans areas, how can they protect the beaches? They have got to do a lot better job. It took four Senators going to Louisiana to get the booms cleaned up near Grand Isle.

There are no performance standards to make sure BP or the government are doing what they say they are doing and that it is working. There must be relentless follow-through by the government. The Coast Guard is treating BP as if it were another government agency, when the Coast Guard needs to take BP to task. They need to make sure that they have performance standards and they need to make sure that there is follow-through.

After witnessing the catastrophe in the gulf and seeing the way the oil is impacting the people, the communities, and the environment, I am so glad that we in Maryland opposed offshore drilling. No matter what is the energy policy I will always oppose offshore drilling off of the Mid-Atlantic coast. We can never let what's happening in the gulf happen to any other communities.

Our first responsibility will be to the Nation's taxpayers, not to the oil companies. Our second responsibility is to the people of the gulf, to do all we can to protect them. We need to make sure that we contain the oil and can clean it up so they can get on with their lives and their livelihoods.

I was honored to be able to go and represent Marylanders there because we are coastal people too. When I talked to the people down there who fish and crab, we talked about how we use the same kind of bait, we use the same kind of line, the same kind of ways. We cook them a little bit different—but we eat them all the same. And when they held our hands, they said when you go back to Maryland and Washington, don't ever forget us. And we won't. We are all Americans, we are all coastal people, and we are all in this together.

58TH ANNUAL NATIONAL PRAYER BREAKFAST

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, I had the privilege of co-chairing the 58th Annual National Prayer Breakfast with Senator KLOBUCHAR. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the transcript of the 2010 National Prayer Breakfast proceedings be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

58TH NATIONAL PRAYER BREAKFAST

Senator Amy Klobuchar: Good morning, everyone. I am Amy Klobuchar, the Senator from Minnesota. Welcome to the 58th annual National Prayer Breakfast. For anyone from warmer climates, we know it is a little snowy, but in Minnesota we would call this, "fair to partly cloudy." What a gathering. This is a very different scene from the first National Prayer Breakfast all the way back in 1952—that was attended only by a couple hundred people and they were all men. And now what we have today is over 3,000 people from all 50 states and over 140 countries. Although the National Prayer Breakfast may look a lot different than it did in 1952, one of the great traditions of this event is that it is bipartisan, as you can see from our head table up here, as well as the fact that we have a Democratic and a Republican co-chair. In that tradition, I am very proud to introduce to you my Republican co-chair and good friend, the Senator from Georgia, Johnny Isakson.

Senator Johnny Isakson: Thank you. We do welcome you because what began as a very small group in 1952 has become a group that has influence around the world in countries all over this world. We are so delighted that you traveled near and you travelled far to be a part of the National Prayer Breakfast here in the United States of America. Amy and I are both members of the Senate but one important thing to know is that we alternate years—this happened to be the Senate's year to chair the National Prayer Breakfast. But next year, the House will as well. We do so in partnership, we do so in brotherhood, and we do so in love, and we do so in faith. I now want to begin by introducing my side of the head table, and then Amy will introduce her side of the head table. First, the Vice President of the United States of America, Joe Biden; the Secretary of State of the United States of America, Hillary Rodham Clinton; the distinguished Senator from the state of Utah, Orrin Hatch; the luckiest thing that ever happened to me 41 years ago, my wife, Dianne; the distinguished senior Senator from the state of Oregon, Ron Wyden; the co-chair of the House prayer breakfast, from Missouri, Representative Todd Akin; a lady who has the voice of an angel and later you will hear her sing, God Bless America, Sergeant First Class MaryKay Messenger, the lead vocalist of the United States Military Academy Band; and my, friend and the artist who will sing the closing hymn, Ralph Freeman.

Senator Klobuchar: Johnny put the music together this morning and you are going to love it. President Obama and the First Lady will be joining us shortly; His Excellency Jose Luis Rodriguez Zapatero, the Prime Minister of Spain is with us; my husband, John Bessler who made our daughter's lunch at 5:30 this morning while I was getting ready for this; Admiral Mike Mullen, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; 2007 Heisman Trophy winner, Tim Tebow; the co-chair of the House prayer breakfast, Representative Charlie Wilson of Ohio; and the Heisman Trophy winner of Senate chaplains, Rear Admiral Barry Black.

Johnny and I wanted you all to hear this morning from our friend, Senate Chaplain, Barry Black, who like all Senate chaplains since 1789 opens each session of the Senate with a prayer. To me and Johnny, Barry is a friend and a spiritual adviser but he is also an embodiment of the power of faith and discipline and hard work. From his impoverished childhood in Baltimore to his distinguished 27-year career in the U.S. Navy, to his service in the Senate, Chaplain Black's "only in America" story, a story he has detailed so eloquently in his book, From the Hood to the Hill, shows us that God has great plans for our lives. It is my pleasure to introduce to you our friend, Chaplain Barry Black, who will lead us in the opening prayer.

Rear Admiral Barry Black: Let us lift our hearts in prayer. Lord of life, the giver of every good and perfect gift. You have been our help in ages past and our hope for years to come. Lord, forgive us when we forget that more things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of. We thank you for this nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that people possess basic rights that they receive from you. Make us good global neighbors as we remember that righteousness exalts a nation but sin is a reproach to any people. Hear our petitions and use our supplications to change and shape our times according to your plan. May our prayers empower us to trust you more fully, live for you more completely and serve you more willingly. In a special way, smile upon our international guests who have travelled great distances to be with us, give them traveling mercies as they return home. And Lord, shower your favor upon the program participants, especially our primary presenter. May the words of their mouths and the meditations of their hearts bring honor to you. Bless this morning, our food and fellowship. We pray this in the matchless name of Jesus. Amen.

Senator Isakson: Would you please welcome to your right, Mr. Robert Fraumann, the most gifted musician the United Methodist Church has ever known and enjoy his mix of Beethoven's "Fifth Symphony" and "How Great Thou Art" and "The Warsaw Concerto" and "To God Be the Glory." Robert Fraumann.

Mr. Robert Fraumann: (piano music)

Narrator: Ladies and Gentlemen, the President of the United States Barack Obama and the First Lady Michelle Obama.

Senator Klobuchar: Welcome, Mr. President, Mrs. Obama. We are so pleased to have you here. I also know there are many members from the House of Representatives. I see Speaker Pelosi. And from the United States Senate and the President's Cabinet—if they could all stand so we could acknowledge you. Thank you, Mr. President, you should know that Johnny, being from Georgia, is really adjusting to the fact that this breakfast had quiche instead of grits. So I really don't know how he is going to explain that when he gets home. And actually, Johnny has been a great pal for me this year as a co-chair of the Senate prayer breakfast and I can tell you that to show his support for his co-chair, he actually supported the Vikings over the Saints in the playoff game. That was a tough game. My fourth quarter prayers made no difference but not even God can overrule a ref's calls.

Senator Isakson: You know I ain't real sure it was the refs. It might have been Brett Farve's interception.

Senator Klobuchar: Very good.

Senator Isakson: We are honored to be here today and I am honored to share with Amy, the co-chairmanship of the Senate prayer breakfast. She thinks getting me to pull for the Vikings was the ultimate reconciliation, not true. Ultimate reconciliation is when Senator Bill Nelson convinced me to invite the quarterback of the Florida Gators, who beat us four successive years at the University of Georgia. Tim, welcome, we are glad to have you. This is a great occasion and we are so delighted and honored that all of you are here today. And I am going to turn it back over to our leader, Amy Klobuchar.

Senator Klobuchar: Thank you. Each week Johnny and I and our fellow senators get together for a weekly Senate prayer breakfast. I always come away from it a better person. At our breakfasts, a senator always speaks, sometimes about his or her faith, sometimes about a personal struggle, sometimes about the challenges of forgiveness after a tough political fight. Our prayer breakfasts are always real and refreshingly honest. And just when I am ready to give up on working with maybe a few of my colleagues, it reminds me that we all share a common purpose and a common humanity, and that with faith and forgiveness, we can start anew. Now it is my honor today to introduce Sergeant First Class MaryKay Messenger, the lead vocalist with the United States Military Academy Band. MaryKay first sang with the band in 1980 at the age of twelve. She continued throughout the years as a guest vocalist until she joined the Army in 1996. She has performed throughout the world—everywhere from Beijing to the opening bell of the New York Stock Exchange, from Yankee Stadium to Carnegie Hall. This morning she will be singing "God Bless America," a song composed by Irving Berlin during the First World War while he was serving in a United States Army camp. MaryKay Messenger.

Sgt. MaryKay Messenger: [Singing]

While the storm clouds gather far across the sea,

Let us swear allegiance to a land that's free,
Let us all be grateful for a land so fair,
As we raise our voices in a solemn prayer.
God Bless America,
Land that I love.

Stand beside her, and guide her
Through the night with a light from above.
From the mountains, to the prairies,
To the oceans, white with foam
God bless America, My home sweet home.
God bless America, My home sweet home.

Senator Ron Wyden: Good morning, Mr. President, Mrs. Obama, honored guests. It is my privilege to offer a reading from the second book of the Torah, the Book of Exodus. Exodus deals with the formation of the Jewish people into a nation as they make their way from slavery to the Promised Land. There are very important lessons in the passage where Moses' father in law, Jethro, a Midianite priest, guides Moses on the correct way to govern his people.

"Jethro, the priest of Midian, Moses' father-in-law, heard all that God had done for Moses and for Israel His people, how the Lord had brought Israel out from Egypt." Then, later in the passage, "the next day Moses sat as magistrate among the people while the people stood about Moses from morning until evening. But when Moses' father-in-law saw how much he had to do for the people, he said 'What is this thing you are doing to the people? Why do you act alone while all the people stand about you from morning until evening?' Moses replied to his father-in-law, 'It is because the people come to me to inquire of God; when they have a dispute, it comes before me and I decide between one person and another and I make known the law and the teachings of God.' But Moses' father-in-law said to him, 'the thing you are doing is not right. You will surely wear yourself out and these people as well. For the task is too heavy for you. You cannot do it alone. Now listen to me, I will give you council and God be with you. You represent the people before God. You bring the disputed before God and enjoin upon them before the laws and the teachings and make it known to them, the way they are to go and the practices they are to follow. You shall also seek out from among all of the people capable men who fear God, trustworthy men who spurn ill-gotten gain, set these over them as chiefs of thousands, hundreds, fifties and tens and let them judge the people at all times. Have them bring every major dispute to you but let them decide every minor dispute for themselves. Make it easier for yourself by letting them share the burden with you. If you do this and God commands you, you will be able to bear up and all these people too will go home unwary.' Now Moses heeded his father-in-law and did just as he had said. Moses chose capable men out of all of Israel and appointed them heads over all the people, chiefs of thousands, hundreds, fifties and tens and they judged the people at all times. The difficult matters they would bring to Moses and all the minor matters they would decide themselves. Then Moses bade his father-in-law farewell and he went his way to his own land."

May we all show similar wisdom and be open, open to advice and guidance from any source. Not just within our own group, our own faction, our own tribe, and it is only with that wisdom can we hope to provide just and true leadership.

Congressman Charlie Wilson: Good morning Mr. President, Madam Secretary, honored guests. I am Congressman Charlie Wilson from Ohio's sixth district and my co-chair is Congressman Todd Akin of Missouri's second district. We would like to thank the Senate for putting this program together this morning. We know the House is looking forward to putting it together again next year. Todd and I are here together this morning because we are the co-chairs of the House prayer breakfast. Members of Congress from both parties have been meeting for prayer on a weekly basis for more than five decades in the House. We come together in the Capitol dining room every Thursday morning at eight a.m., with no staff, we read a verse of scripture, we pray for the sick and wounded and we offer up a prayer of thanksgiving for our country. We also have a different guest speaker each week who shares their testimony. One week it's a Democrat, the next week it's a Republican. Finally, we close in prayer and we make sure to share that too—one week a Democrat leads the closing prayer, the next a Republican. We never know how many are going to be at our prayer breakfast to attend our weekly gathering. I am happy though to let you know that it has increased considerably this year. Our meeting lasts about an hour and many of us refer to it as the best hour of the week. We hope that you will consider our example and set aside time each week with your colleagues to deepen your relationships and open your mind to God. And now, my co-chair, Todd Akin.

Congressman Todd Akin: Good morning, I am Todd Akin from Missouri. The tradition of the Prayer Breakfast goes back to the days of President Eisenhower. Because of the tremendous importance that we place on a personal relationship with God, a personal relationship with Jesus Christ, it is a Christian prayer breakfast. And yet we welcome happily people of all different faiths to join us. Along these lines when we arrive on a Thursday morning and hear a personal testimony, we hear a tremendous diversity in the kinds of stories. For example, we heard this story of a little boy who grows up penniless and orphaned on the streets wondering where the next meal will come from, and how he is led on a journey to the U.S. Congress. We hear another story of a pilot of a small airplane in the fog over the mountains of Germany with little instrumentation and how in answer to prayer, a hole is opened up in the fog showing a landing strip way below—how he dives his airplane through the hole in the fog, lands on the landing strip and the fog closes in around the aircraft. It is from these and other testimonies that Congressmen develop a mutual respect and affection for each other. The statesman William Wilberforce from England had two great aims in his life. The first was to get rid of slavery. The second one was to build civility—that is, a respectful and loving treatment of the different legislators in England. This prayer breakfast that we enjoy every week inspires that civility in an otherwise polarizing political environment, that is why it is the best hour of the week. God bless you.

Senator Orrin Hatch: [alarm going off on cell phone] Woops, oh dear.

Senator Klobuchar: It's time for your prayer. Is that the alarm for your prayer?

Senator Hatch: I never learned how to turn that alarm off. I apologize. Let us pray. Our dear Father in Heaven, as we bow our heads this morning before Thee, we are so grateful for this great nation and for the nations of the world, but especially for the opportunities we have as a nation to bring peace and contentment and tranquility throughout this world. We are grateful for our great leaders and we pray that Thou wilt bless them. We pray that Thou wilt bless our President and our Vice President and their cabinet and all of the leaders throughout the federal government that they might be inspired to lead us to do the things that are righteous in Thy sight that we might be able to be good followers and that we might be able to combine together to do what is right. As Moses' father in law told him, let's share the responsibility and let's work together in the best interest of our country. Let's have bipartisanship reborn again in this great nation. We are so grateful for those who serve in the military who are represented here today and throughout this country. We are grateful for the sacrifices that they undertake on our behalf. We are grateful for those who are in harm's way and pray that Thou wilt pour special blessings upon them, that they might be blessed and protected. And we pray that we might be a nation that will help to bring peace and tranquility throughout the world. We are grateful for all of the food, clothing and shelter that Thou has provided for us. We are grateful for those who serve in governments throughout the states, for the respective state legislatures. And last but not least, we are grateful for the Congress of the United States and we will pray that the Congress might be able to work together as Democrats and Republicans and Independents to serve Thee, to serve our country, to serve our fellow men and women, and to bring peace and contentment to this great nation and throughout the world. We pray at this time for those who are suffering in Haiti and elsewhere throughout the world. We ask you to bless them and help them and help us to do our share in helping throughout this world. We are grateful for the leaders from other countries who are here and we pray Thy blessings upon them. Once again, we ask that you bless our President, Vice President and the leaders of this country. In the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

Senator Klobuchar: Thank you very much Senator Hatch. Now to read our next scripture today we are honored to be joined by Jose Luis Rodriguez Zapatero, who is currently serving his second four year term as the Prime Minister of Spain. Prime Minister Zapatero however, is not just the leader of one very important country, he is also the current Chairman of the European Union. And if that isn't enough, he made a claim to fame as Prime Minister with a cabinet where a majority of his cabinet members are women. I decided to add that. The Prime Minister has also made invaluable contributions to interfaith dialogue and reconciliation in his country, both as an individual and as an elected leader. His personal quest has been to promote peaceful coexistence and tolerance among the religious faiths in his own country and throughout the world. Please join me in welcoming the Prime Minister of Spain, the Chairman of the European Union, His Excellency Jose Luis Rodriguez Zapatero.

The Prime Minister of Spain: [Speaking in Spanish]

Translator: Mr. President, Members of Congress, ladies and gentlemen, thank you. Thank you for inviting me to participate—on behalf of my country, on behalf of Spain—in one of the American people's most symbolic traditions. And thank you to Senators Klobuchar and Isakson. And please do allow me now to speak to you in Spanish, the language in which people first prayed to the God of the Gospels in this land.

No one knows the value of religious freedom better than all of you. Your forbearers fled oppression and so as to never be deprived of their freedom, they founded this country. A nation, the United States of America, born out of democracy; a nation that has never stopped thriving thanks to the strength of that democracy, which abolished slavery, recognized equal voting rights and outlawed discrimination; a nation that has expanded pluralism, tolerance and respect for all choices and beliefs. Admirable feats, admirable in the eyes of a firm believer in democracy, living in one of the oldest nations in the world, Spain. Our nation is also diverse, forged out of diversity and renewed in its diversity. Our nation is as diverse as America. It is the most multi-cultural of the lands of Europe, a Spain that is Celtic, Iberian, Phoenician, Greek, Roman, Jewish, Arab and Christian, especially Christian as defined by the Latin American Author Carlos Fuentes. Our two countries owe much to us that have come to us from abroad. Our countries cannot be understood without them. Without those who throughout history have come to our land and living in our midst have become us, have become what we are.

Allow me to read you a Bible passage from Deuteronomy, Chapter 24, "You should not withhold the wages of poor and needy laborers whether other Israelites or aliens who reside in your land or in one of your towns. You shall pay them their wages daily before sunset because they are poor and their livelihood depends on them."

Let us be concerned with integrating those who have come to work and live in our countries in our midst. Let us also be concerned with all of those whom we cannot welcome amongst us and who are suffering from hunger and extreme poverty in so many places around the world, such as those living in Haiti and whose misfortune has moved us to offer up all our efforts of solidarity; a solidarity which reconciles us with our human condition, with our vulnerability and our fraternity and which should never wane. Furthermore, I would like to proclaim my deep commitment to those men and women who in our societies in these difficult times are suffering the scarcity of jobs. They should all know that as government leaders, this task is our paramount concern. No other task is more binding to us than that of fostering job creation. Today, it is my plea that we also advocate the right of all persons anywhere in the world to moral autonomy, to their quest for that which is good. Today, it is my plea that we advocate the freedom of all to live their own lives, to live with their loved one and to build and nurture their family environment. This is worthy of respect.

Freedom, civic truth, the truth common to us all, it is what makes us true, genuine, authentic human beings, because freedom enables each of us to look destiny in the eye and seek our own truth. But tolerance is so much more than accepting the other. It is discovering, knowing, acknowledging the other. Ignorance of the other is at the root of all conflicts that threaten human kind and endanger our future. Ignorance breeds hate. Harmony is founded on knowledge—so is peace. Even in the past, Spain was a model of peaceful coexistence among the three religions of the Book—Judaism, Christianity and Islam. And today in the world, Spain defends religious tolerance and respect for difference, dialogue, peaceful coexistence of cultures, the alliance of civilizations. We do so with as much conviction as we reject excluding statements of moral superiority, absolutism, and uncompromising fundamentalism. The United States knows, as does Spain, that the spurious use of religious faith to justify violence can be hugely destructive. And what better occasion than this prayer breakfast to commemorate together, to honor together, our victims of terrorism. Because it also together that we defend freedom wherever it is threatened.

Mr. President, members of Congress, ladies and gentlemen, be it with a lofty dimension or a civic one, freedom is always the foundation of hope, of hope in the future, for liberty as for honor says Don Quixote in the masterpiece written in Spanish, "One can rightfully risk one's life, yet captivity is the worst evil that can befall men." Liberty is one of the most precious gifts heaven has bestowed upon man that this gift may continue blessing America and all people's on earth. Thank you very much. [Applause]

Senator Isakson: Prime Minister Zapatero, thank you for those meaningful and inspirational words. We are delighted to have you in America today and we appreciate your friendship very much. You know every day when I find those special few moments to pause and meditate and pray for the things I am thankful for, the very first prayer is for the men and women who serve us in harm's way in our armed forces around the world. For I know they not only serve the United States, but they serve peace, freedom and democracy of all nations around the world. And it is my pleasure now to introduce the leader of the United States' military, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Admiral Michael Mullen.

Admiral Michael Mullen: Thank you. Good morning Mr. President, Mrs. Obama, Vice President Biden, Secretary Clinton, other distinguished heads of state and distinguished visitors, ladies and gentlemen. I am deeply honored to be here and to have this opportunity. I have been asked this morning to offer a prayer for world leaders. When my wife, Deborah, informed me that one of the leaders I would be praying for was probably me, something I hadn't really considered, I actually started taking this very seriously. I am also mindful that there is more than one higher power in the room today, no offense, Mr. Vice President. Now, before I ask you all to join me in prayer I would like to tell a little story. It is about an Army platoon leader in the Korean War. He and his men fell into an ambush one day out on patrol and found themselves surrounded by enemy soldiers. They hunkered down in a small clearing, making the best of what little cover they could find and tried desperately to hold on against what seemed to be terrible odds. Every now and then, the platoon sergeant noticed that his young lieutenant would dash behind a big rock and sit for a minute or two and then dash back out and start issuing new commands: "move here, move there, shift your fire high, shift it low." The barrage of orders seemed to come almost as fast as the enemy bullets themselves. After an hour or so, while suffering only a few casualties, the platoon had chased off their attackers and began to safely make their way back to base. On the walk back, the sergeant approached the lieutenant and asked him: "Exactly what were you doing behind that rock, sir?" The officer grinned a little, sighed, his shoulders sank, he said "I needed time to think, to adjust so I kept asking myself three questions: What am I doing? What am I not doing? And how can I make up the difference?" Now, I do not know if that story is really true or not—I am told that it is. I really like it, because it illustrates perfectly the deepest challenge of leadership during difficult times—that of self reflection and sober analysis. Even in the heat of battle, perhaps especially in the heat of battle, we must find the time to think, to adjust, and to improve our situation. After more than four decades in uniform in peace and in war, it has been my experience that people are guided best not by their instincts but by their reason. That leaders are most effective not when they rule passionately but when they decide dispassionately. As St. Thomas Aquinas once said, "A man has free choice only to the extent that he is rational." And so in these dangerous, difficult and immensely challenging times, when our young troops fight two wars overseas while their loved ones back home fight to keep their families together, when everything from the economy to the environment instills fear and uncertainty, let us exercise our own free choice. Let us lead rationally and calmly. Let us take the time to ask ourselves: What are we doing? What are we not doing? And how can we make up the difference? We may not always like the answers—I know I seldom do—but we can always learn from having posed the questions.

And now, please bow your heads and join me in prayer. Father in Heaven, we gather today to ask your blessing over the lives and decisions of those who lead us around the world. Theirs is a mighty task and a noble calling, for upon their shoulders rest the hopes and dreams of billions of people, not only of this generation but of future generations who know us not. May you guide them in that pursuit, oh Lord, give them the faith to seek your guidance, the wisdom to make the right decisions and the character to see those decisions through. Help them choose love over hate, courage over fear, principle over expediency. Let them always seek concord and peace and to remember that the best leader is a good and humble servant. Encourage them, Father, to seek your council as Solomon himself did in 1 Kings, chapter 3, saying to you: "but I am only a little child and do not know how to carry out my duties. So give me a discerning heart to govern your people and to distinguish between right and wrong." May you bless us all Lord, your children, and give our leaders that same discerning heart. Help us always to distinguish between right and wrong and to serve others before ourselves. This we pray, in Thy name, Amen.

Senator Klobuchar: Thank you very much, Admiral Mullen. It is now my great honor to introduce our keynote speaker, Secretary of State, Hillary Rodham Clinton. She is an incredibly accomplished woman whose life has been shaped by the deep and abiding faith she was blessed to receive during her childhood in suburban Chicago. Faith was always central to Hillary Clinton's family. Her mother taught Sunday school and made sure that her daughter and sons were there the moment the church doors opened. In high school, she was deeply influenced by her youth minister who taught her about faith in action. On one memorable evening at age fourteen, her church youth group went to hear a speech by Reverend Martin Luther King, a transformative experience that inspires her today. As a successful attorney and the First Lady of Arkansas, her faith inspired her to be a forceful advocate for disadvantaged children and families. As our nation's First Lady, her faith led her to be a champion for health care reform and for human rights, especially for women around the world. As I have learned from people who were here at this prayer breakfast long before me, Hillary Clinton and her husband, President Bill Clinton, were always generous with their time at this prayer breakfast. As a Senator from New York, Senator Clinton's faith sustained as she became a highly respected legislator who always did her homework. And after a long and bruising presidential campaign in which she shattered the glass ceiling for national women candidates forever, she was asked by President Obama to serve as Secretary of State. She could have so easily said "no" and stayed as the powerhouse she was in the Senate, instead, she once again answered the call to serve. She didn't flinch, she didn't hesitate. And in the words of Isaiah, she said, "Send me." From the sands of the Mideast, to the capitals of Europe, to the devastation in Haiti, she has shown America's strength and commitment to the world. Please join me in welcoming, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton.

Secretary of State Hillary Clinton: Thank you. Thank you. Thank you very much. I have to begin by saying that I am not Bono. Those of you who were here when he was, I apologize beforehand. But it is a great pleasure to be with you and to be here with President and Mrs. Obama, to be with Vice President Biden, with Chairman Mullen, with certainly our hosts today, my former colleagues and friends, Senators Johnny Isakson and Amy Klobuchar. And to be with so many distinguished guests and visitors who have come from all over our country and indeed from all over the world.

I have attended this prayer breakfast every year since 1993, and I have always found it to be a gathering that inspires and motivates me. Now today, our minds are still filled with the images of the tragedy of Haiti where faith is being tested daily in food lines and makeshift hospitals, in tent cities where there are not only so many suffering people but so many vanished dreams.

When I think about the horrible catastrophe that has struck Haiti, I am both saddened but also spurred. This is a moment that has already been embraced by people of faith from everywhere. I thank Prime Minister Zapatero for his country's response and commitment. Because in the days since the earthquake, we have seen the world and the world's faithful spring into action on behalf of those suffering. President Obama has put our country on the leading edge of making sure that we do all we can to help alleviate not only the immediate suffering, but to assist in the rebuilding and recovery. So many countries have answered the call, and so many churches, synagogues, mosques and temples have brought their own people together. And even with modern technology through Facebook and telethons and text messages and Twitter, there has been an overwhelming global response. But of course, there is so much more to be done.

When I think about being here with all of you today, there are so many subjects to talk about. You have already heard, both in prayer and in Scripture reading and in Prime Minister Zapatero's remarks, a number of messages. But let me be both personal and speak from my unique perspective now as Secretary of State. I have been here as a First Lady. I have been here as a senator, and now I am here as a Secretary of State. I have heard heartfelt descriptions of personal faith journeys. I have heard impassioned pleas for feeding the hungry and helping the poor, caring for the sick. I have heard speeches about promoting understanding among people of different faiths. I have met hundreds of visitors from countries across the globe. I have seen the leaders of my own country come here amidst the crises of the time and, for at least a morning, put away political and ideological differences. And I have watched and I have listened to three presidents, each a man of faith, speak from their hearts, both sharing their own feelings about being in a position that has almost intolerably impossible burdens to bear, and appealing often, either explicitly or implicitly, for an end to the increasing smallness, irrelevancy, even meanness, of our own political culture. My own heart has been touched and occasionally pierced by the words I have heard and often my spirit has been lifted by the musicians and the singers who have shared their gifts in praising the Lord with us. And during difficult and painful times, my faith has been strengthened by the personal connections that I have experienced with people who, by the calculus of politics, were on the opposite side of me on the basis of issues or partisanship.

After my very first prayer breakfast, a bipartisan group of women asked me to join them for lunch and told me that they were forming a prayer group. And these prayer partners prayed for me. They prayed for me during some very challenging times. They came to see me in the White House. They kept in touch with me and some still do today. And they gave me a handmade book with messages, quotes, and Scripture to sustain me. And of all the thousands of gifts that I have received in the White House, I have a special affection for this one. Because in addition to the tangible gift of the book, it contained 12 intangible gifts, 12 gifts of discernment, peace, compassion, faith, fellowship, vision, forgiveness, grace, wisdom, love, joy, and courage. And I have had many occasions to pull out that book and to look at it and to try, Chairman Mullen, to figure out how to close the gap of what I am feeling and doing with what I know I should be feeling and doing. As a person of faith, it is a constant struggle, particularly in the political arena, to close that gap that each of us faces.

In February of 1994, the speaker here was Mother Theresa. She gave, as everyone who remembers that occasion will certainly recall, a strong address against abortion. And then she asked to see me. And I thought, "Oh, dear." And after the breakfast we went behind that curtain and we sat on folding chairs, and I remember being struck by how small she was and how powerful her hands were, despite her size, and that she was wearing sandals in February in Washington.

We began to talk and she told me that she knew that we had a shared conviction about adoption being vastly better as a choice for unplanned or unwanted babies. And she asked me—or more properly, she directed me—to work with her to create a home for such babies here in Washington. I know that we often picture, as we are growing up, God as a man with a white beard. But that day, I felt like I had been ordered, and that the message was coming not just through this diminutive woman but from some place far beyond.

So, I started to work. And it took a while because we had to cut through all the red tape. We had to get all of the approvals. I thought it would be easier than it turned out to be. She proved herself to be the most relentless lobbyist I have ever encountered. She could not get a job in your White House, Mr. President. She never let up. She called me from India, she called me from Vietnam, she wrote me letters and it was always: "When is the house going to open? How much more can be done—quickly?"

Finally, the moment came: June 1995 and the Mother Theresa Home for Infant Children opened. She flew in from Kolkata to attend the opening and, like a happy child, she gripped my arm and led me around, looking at the bassinets and the pretty painted colors on the wall, and just beaming about what this meant for children and their futures.

A few years later, I attended her funeral in Kolkata, where I saw presidents and prime ministers, royalty and street beggars pay her homage. And after the service, her successor, Sister Nirmala, the leader of the Missionary of Charity, invited me to come to the Mother House. I was deeply touched. When I arrived, I realized I was one of only a very few outsiders. And I was directed into a white-washed room where the casket had already arrived. And we stood around with the nuns, with the candles on the walls flickering, and prayed for this extraordinary woman. And then Sister Nirmala asked me to offer a prayer. I felt both inadequate and deeply honored, just as I do today.

And in the tradition of prayer breakfast speakers, let me share a few matters that reflect how I came on my own faith journey, and how I think about the responsibilities that President Obama and his administration and our government face today. As Amy said, I grew up in the Methodist Church. On both sides of my father's family, the Rodhams and the Joneses; they came from mining towns. And they claimed, going back many years, to have actually been converted by John and Charles Wesley. And, of course, Methodists—we are methodical. It was a particularly good religion for me. And part of it is a commitment to living out your faith. We believe that faith without works may not be dead, but it is hard to discern from time to time. John Wesley had this simple rule which I carry around with me as I travel: "Do all the good you can by all the means you can and by all the ways you can and all the places you can at all the times you can to all the people you can, as long as ever you can." That is a tall order. And of course, one of the interpretive problems with it is, who defines good? What are we actually called to do, and how do we stay humble enough, obedient enough, to ask ourselves, "Am I really doing what I am called to do?" It was a good rule to be raised by and it was certainly a good rule for my mother and father to discipline us by. And I think it is a good rule to live by, with the appropriate dose of humility. Our world is an imperfect one filled with imperfect people, so we constantly struggle to meet our own spiritual goals. But John Wesley's teachings, and the teachings of my church, particularly during my childhood and teenage years, gave me the impetus to believe that I did have a responsibility. It meant not sitting on the sidelines, but being in the arena. And it meant constantly working to try to fulfill the lessons that I absorbed as a child. It is not easy. We are here today because we are all seekers, and we can all look around our own lives and the lives of those whom we know and see everyone falling so short.

As we look around the world, there are so many problems and challenges that people of faith are attempting to address—or should be. We can recite those places where human beings are mired in the past—their hatreds, their differences—where governments refuse to speak to other governments, where the progress of entire nations is undermined because isolation and insularity seem less risky than cooperation and collaboration, where all too often it is religion that is the force that drives and sustains division rather than being the healing balm. These patterns persist despite the overwhelming evidence that more good will comes from suspending old animosities and preconceptions, from engaging others in dialogue, from remembering the cardinal rules found in all of the world's major religions.

Last October, I visited Belfast once again, 11 years after the signing of the Good Friday agreement, a place where being a Protestant or a Catholic determined where you lived, often where you worked, whether you were a friend or an enemy, a threat or a target. Yet over time, as the body count grew, the bonds of common humanity became more powerful than the differences fueled by ancient wrongs. So bullets have been traded for ballots—as we meet this morning, both communities are attempting to hammer out a final agreement on the yet unresolved issues between them. And they are discovering anew what the Scripture urges us: "Let us not become weary in doing good, for at the proper time we will reap a harvest if we do not give up." Even in places where God's presence and promise seems fleeting and unfulfilled or completely absent, the power of one person's faith and the determination to act can help lead a nation out of darkness.

Some of you may have seen the film, "Pray the Devil Back to Hell." It is the story of a Liberian woman who was tired of the conflict and the killing and the fear that had gripped her country for years. So she went to her church and she prayed for an end to the civil war. And she organized other women at her church, and then at other churches, then at the mosques. Soon thousands of women became a mass movement, rising up and praying for a peace, and working to bring it about that finally, finally ended the conflict.

And yet, the devil must have left Liberia and taken up residence in Congo. When I was in the Democratic Republic of Congo this summer, the contrasts were so overwhelmingly tragic—a country the size of Western Europe, rich in minerals and natural resources, where 5.4 million people have been killed in the most deadly conflict since World War II; where 1,100 women and girls are raped every month; where the life expectancy is 46 and dropping; where poverty, starvation and all of the ills that stalk the human race are in abundance. When I traveled to Goma, I saw in a single day the best and the worst of humanity. I met with women who had been savaged and brutalized physically and emotionally, victims of gender and sexual-based violence in a place where law, custom and even faith did little to protect them. But I also saw courageous women who, by faith, went back in to the bush to find those who, like them, had been violently attacked. I saw the doctors and the nurses who were helping to heal the wounds, and I saw so many who were there because their faith led them to it.

As we look at the world today and we reflect on the overwhelming response—of the outpouring of generosity—to what happened in Haiti, I am reminded of a story of Elijah. After he goes to Mount Horeb, we read that he faced "a great wind, so strong that it was splitting mountains and breaking rocks in pieces before the Lord, but the Lord was not in the wind; and after the wind, an earthquake, but the Lord was not in the earthquake; and after the earthquake, a fire, but the Lord was not in the fire; and after the fire, a sound of sheer silence—a still small voice." It was then that Elijah heard the voice of the Lord. It is often when we are only quiet enough to listen, that we do as well. It is something we can do at any time, without a disaster or a catastrophe provoking it. It shouldn't take that.

But the teachings of every religion call us to care for the poor, tell us to visit the orphans and widows, to be generous and charitable, to alleviate suffering. All religions have their version of the Golden Rule and direct us to love our neighbor and welcome the stranger and visit the prisoner. But how often in the midst of our own lives do we respond to that? All of these holy texts, all of this religious wisdom from these very different faiths, call on us to act out of love. In politics, we sometimes talk about message discipline—making sure everyone uses the same set of talking points. Well, whoever was in charge of message discipline on these issues for every religion certainly knew what they were doing. Regardless of our differences, we all got the same talking points and the same marching orders. So the charge is a personal one. Yet across the world, we see organized religion standing in the way of faith, perverting love, undermining that message. Sometimes it is easier to see the far away than the here at home. But religion, cloaked in naked power lust, is used to justify horrific violence, attacks on homes, markets, schools, volleyball games, churches, mosques, synagogues, temples. From Iraq to Pakistan and Afghanistan to Nigeria and the Middle East, religion is used as a club to deny the human rights of girls and women, from the Gulf to Africa to Asia, and to discriminate, even advocating the execution of gays and lesbians. Religion is used to enshrine in law intolerance of free expression and peaceful protest. Iran is now detaining people and executing people under a new crime—waging war against God. That seems to be a rather dramatic identity crisis.

So in the Obama Administration, we are working to bridge religious divides. We are taking on violations of human rights perpetrated in the name of religion. And we invite members of Congress and clergy and active citizens like all of you here to join us. Of course, we are supporting the peace processes from Northern Ireland to the Middle East, and of course we are following up on the President's historic speech at Cairo with outreach efforts to Muslims and promoting interfaith dialogue, and of course we are condemning the repression in Iran. But we are also standing up for girls and for women, who too often in the name of religion, are denied their basic human rights. And we are standing up for gays and lesbians who deserve to be treated as full human beings. And we are also making it clear to countries and leaders that these are priorities of the United States. Every time I travel, I raise the plight of girls and women, and make it clear that we expect to see changes. And I recently called President Museveni, whom I have known through the prayer breakfast, and expressed the strongest concerns about a law being considered in the parliament of Uganda.

We are committed, not only to reaching out and speaking up about the perversion of religion, and in particularly the use of it to promote and justify terrorism, but also seeking to find common ground. We are working with Muslim nations to come up with an appropriate way of demonstrating criticism of religious intolerance without stepping over into the area of freedom of religion, or non-religion, and expression. So there is much to be done, and there are a lot of challenging opportunities for each of us as we leave this prayer breakfast, this 58th prayer breakfast.

In 1975, my husband and I, who had gotten married in October, and we were both teaching at the University of Arkansas Law School in beautiful Fayetteville, Arkansas—we got married on a Saturday and went back to work on a Monday. So around Christmas-time, we decided that we should go somewhere and celebrate, take a honeymoon. And my late father said, "Well, that's a great idea, we'll come too." And indeed Bill and I and my entire family went to Acapulco. We had a great time, but it wasn't exactly a honeymoon. So when we got back, Bill was talking to one of his friends who was then working in Haiti, and his friend said, "Well, why don't you come see me? This is the most interesting country. Come and take some time." So indeed, we did. So we were there over the New Year's holidays. And I remember visiting the cathedral in Port-au-Prince, in the midst of, at that time, so much fear from the regime of the Duvaliers, and so much poverty, there was this cathedral that had stood there and served as a beacon of hope and faith. After the earthquake, I was looking at some of our pictures from the disaster, and I saw the total destruction of the cathedral. It was just a heart rending moment. And yet, I also saw men and women helping one another, digging through the rubble, dancing and singing in the makeshift communities that they were building up. And I thought again that as the Scripture reminds us, "Though the mountains be shaken and the hills be removed, yet my unfailing love for you will not be shaken nor my covenant of peace be removed."

As the memory of this crisis fades, as the news cameras move on to the next very dramatic incident, let us pray that we can sustain the force and the feeling that we find in our hearts and in our faith in the aftermath of such tragedies. Let us pray that we will all continue to be our brothers' and sisters' keepers. Let us pray that amid our differences we can continue to see the power of faith not only to make us whole as individuals, to provide personal salvation, but to make us a greater whole and a greater force for good on behalf of all creation. So let us do all the good that we can, by all the means we can, in all the ways we can, in all the places we can, to all the people we can, as long as ever we can. God Bless you.

Senator Isakson: Thank you, Secretary Clinton, for your words of inspiration and for the magnificent job you do as the Secretary of State for our nation. I now have the high honor and distinct privilege of introducing the President of the United States—that is no easy task. Have you ever tried introducing somebody that is known to everybody on the planet? It is hard to find something unique and inspirational. Everyone knows of the historic impact of Barack Obama's election to the Presidency of the United States. We all marvel at his oratory skills and his ability to communicate, and we all know his energy is boundless. We also know that his audacity of hope has given hope to millions of people around the world, to aspire to the highest of achievement in their life. But it was his State of the Union that inspired me as to what I would say, because I listened when he asked us to seek those things that we have in common, not those things that divide us. And then I realized it, Mr. President, you and I share one unique characteristic in common—we married way over our heads. With a magnificent First Lady like Michelle Obama, I felt it only appropriate that I would introduce you today, sir, as the husband of the dynamic First Lady of the United States of America, President Barack Obama.

The President: Thank you. Thank you very much. Please be seated.

Thank you so much. Heads of State, Cabinet members, my outstanding Vice President, members of Congress, religious leaders, distinguished guests, Admiral Mullen—it's good to see all of you. Let me begin by acknowledging the co-chairs of this breakfast, Senators Isakson and Klobuchar, who embody the sense of fellowship at the heart of this gathering. They are two of my favorite senators. Let me also acknowledge the director of my Faith-based Office, Joshua DuBois, who is here. He's doing great work.

I want to commend Secretary Hillary Clinton on her outstanding remarks and her outstanding leadership at the State Department. She is doing good every day. I am especially pleased to see my dear friend, Prime Minister Zapatero, and I want him to relay America's greetings to the people of Spain. And Johnny, you are right, I am deeply blessed, and I thank God every day for being married to Michelle Obama.

I am privileged to join you once again as my predecessors have for over half a century. Like them, I come here to speak about the ways my faith informs who I am—as a President and as a person. But I am also here for the same reason that all of you are, for we all share recognition—one as old as time—that a willingness to believe, an openness to grace, a commitment to prayer can bring sustenance to our lives.

There is, of course, a need for prayer even in times of joy and peace and prosperity. Perhaps especially in such times prayer is needed—to guard against pride and to guard against complacency. But rightly or wrongly, most of us are inclined to seek out the divine not in the moment when the Lord makes his face shine upon us but in the moment when God's grace can seem farthest away.

Last month, God's grace, God's mercy, seemed far away from our neighbors in Haiti. And yet I believe that grace was not absent in the midst of tragedy. It was heard in prayers and hymns that broke the silence of an earthquake's wake. It was witnessed among parishioners of churches that stood no more, a road side congregation holding bibles in their laps. It was felt in the presence of relief workers and medics, translators, service men and women bringing food and water and aid to the injured.

One such translator was an American of Haitian decent, representative of the extraordinary work that our men and women in uniform do all around the world—Navy Corpsman Christopher Brossard. And lying on a gurney aboard the USNS Comfort, a woman asked Christopher: "Where do you come from? What country? After my operation," she said, "I will pray for that country." And in Creole, Corpsman Brossard responded, "Etazini." The United States of America.

God's grace, and the compassion and decency of the American people is expressed through the men and women like Corpsman Brossard. It is expressed through the efforts of our Armed Forces; through the efforts of our entire government; through similar efforts from Spain and other countries around the world. It is also, as Secretary Clinton said, expressed through multiple faith-based efforts. By Evangelicals at World Relief. By the American Jewish World Service. By Hindu temples, and mainline Protestants, Catholic Relief Services, African-American churches, the United Sikhs. By Americans of every faith, and no faith, uniting around a common purpose, a higher purpose.

It's inspiring. This is what we do, as Americans, in times of trouble. We unite, recognizing that such crises call on all of us to act, recognizing that there but for the grace of God go I, recognizing that life's most sacred responsibility—one affirmed, as Hillary said, by all of the world's great religions—is to sacrifice something of ourselves for a person in need.

Sadly, though, that spirit is too often absent when tackling the long-term, but no less profound issues facing our country and the world. Too often, that spirit is missing without the spectacular tragedy—the 9/11 or the Katrina, the earthquake or the tsunami—that can shake us out of complacency. We become numb to the day-to-day crises, the slow-moving tragedies of children without food and men without shelter and families without health care. We become absorbed with our abstract arguments, our ideological disputes, our contests for power. And in this Tower of Babel, we lose the sound of God's voice.

Now, for those of us here in Washington, let's acknowledge that democracy has always been messy. Let's not be overly nostalgic. Divisions are hardly new in this country. Arguments about the proper role of government, the relationship between liberty and equality, our obligations to our fellow citizens—these things have been with us since our founding. And I am profoundly mindful that a loyal opposition, a vigorous back and forth, a skepticism of power, all of that is what makes our democracy work.

And we have seen actually some improvement in some circumstances. We haven't seen any canings on the floor of the Senate any time recently. So we shouldn't over-romanticize the past. But there is a sense that something is different now; that something is broken; that those of us in Washington are not serving the people as well as we should. At times, it seems like we are unable to listen to one another; to have at once a serious and civil debate. And this erosion of civility in the public square sows division and distrust among our citizens. It poisons the well of public opinion. It leaves each side little room to negotiate with the other. It makes politics an all-or-nothing sport, where one side is either always right or always wrong when, in reality, neither side has a monopoly on truth. And then we lose sight of the children without food and the men without shelter and the families without health care.

Empowered by faith, consistently, prayerfully, we need to find our way back to civility. That begins with stepping out of our comfort zones in an effort to bridge divisions. We see that in many conservative pastors who are helping lead the way to fix our broken immigration system. It's not what would be expected from them, and yet they recognize, in those immigrant families, the face of God. We see that in the Evangelical leaders who are rallying their congregations to protect our planet. We see it in the increasing recognition among progressives that government cannot solve all of our problems, and that talking about values like responsible fatherhood and healthy marriage are integral to any anti-poverty agenda. Stretching out of our dogmas, our prescribed roles along the political spectrum, that can help us regain a sense of civility.

Civility also requires relearning how to disagree without being disagreeable; understanding as President Kennedy said, that "civility is not a sign of weakness." Now, I am the first to confess that I am not always right. Michelle will testify to that. But surely you can question my policies without questioning my faith, or, for that matter, my citizenship.

Challenging each other's ideas can renew our democracy. But when we challenge each other's motives, it becomes harder to see what we hold in common. We forget that we share in some deep level the same dreams—even when we don't share the same plans on how to fulfill them.

We may disagree about the best way to reform our health care system, but surely we can agree that no one ought to go broke when they get sick in the richest nation on Earth. We can take different approaches to ending inequality, but surely we can agree on the need to lift our children out of ignorance; to lift our neighbors from poverty. We may disagree about gay marriage, but surely we can agree that it is unconscionable to target gays and lesbians for who they are—whether it is here in the United States or, as Hillary mentioned, more extremely in odious laws that are being proposed most recently in Uganda.

Surely, we can agree to find common ground when possible, parting ways when necessary. But in doing so, let us be guided by our faith, and by prayer. For while prayer can buck us up when we are down, keep us calm in a storm; while prayer can stiffen our spines to surmount an obstacle—and I assure you I'm praying a lot these days—prayer can also do something else. It can touch our hearts with humility. It can fill us with a spirit of brotherhood. It can remind us that each of us are children of an awesome and loving God.

Through faith, but not through faith alone, we can unite people to serve the common good. And that's why my Office of Faith-Based and Neighborhood Partnerships has been working so hard since I announced it here last year. We have slashed red tape and built effective partnerships on a range of uses, from promoting fatherhood here at home, to spearheading inter-faith cooperation abroad. And through that office, we have turned the faith based initiative around to find common ground among people of all beliefs, allowing them to make an impact that is civil and respectful of difference and focused on what matters most.

It is this spirit of civility that we are called to take up when we leave here today. That is what I am praying for. I know in difficult times like these—when people are frustrated, when pundits start shouting and politicians start calling each other names—it can seem like a return to civility is not possible, like the very idea is a relic of some bygone era. The word itself seems quaint—civility.

But let us remember those who came before; those who believed in the brotherhood of man even when such a faith was tested. Remember Dr. Martin Luther King. Not long after an explosion ripped through his front porch, his wife and infant daughter inside, he rose to that pulpit in Montgomery and said, "Love is the only force capable of transforming an enemy into a friend."

In the eyes of those who denied his humanity, he saw the face of God.

Remember Abraham Lincoln. On the eve of the Civil War, with states seceding and forces gathering, with a nation divided half slave half free, he rose to deliver his first inaugural and said, "We are not enemies but friends . . . Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection."

Even in the eyes of Confederate soldiers, he saw the face of God.

Remember William Wilberforce, whose Christian faith led him to seek slavery's abolition in Britain. He was vilified, derided, attacked; but he called for "lessening prejudices and conciliating good-will, and thereby making way for the less obstructed progress of truth."

In the eyes of those who sought to silence a nation's conscience, he saw the face of God.

Yes, there are crimes of conscience that call us to action. Yes, there are causes that move our hearts and offenses that stir our souls. But progress does not come when we demonize opponents. It is not born in righteous spite. Progress comes when we open our hearts, when we extend our hands, when we recognize our common humanity. Progress comes when we look into the eyes of another and see the face of God. That we might do so—that we will do so all the time, not just some of the time—is my fervent prayer for the nation and the world.

Thank you, God bless you, and God bless the United States of America.

Senator Isakson: Thank you so much, Mr. President, for your leadership and your words of faith. We are now in for a magnificent treat. Ralph Freeman founded Song Sermon Ministries years ago, has sung on continents around the world and throughout the United States. Ladies and gentlemen, Mr. Ralph Freeman.

Mr. Ralph Freeman: [Singing]

We believe in the Father who created all that is

And we believe the universe and all there is His

As a loving Heavenly Father he yearned to save us all

To lift us from the fall—we believe

We believe in Jesus, the Father's only son
Existing uncreated before time had begun
A sacrifice for sin, he died then he rose again
To ransom sinful man—we believe.

We believe in the Spirit who makes believers one

Our hearts are filled with His presence

The Comforter has come

The kingdom unfolds in His plan

Unhindered by quarrels of man

His church upheld by his hands—we believe

Though the Earth be removed

And time be no more

These truths are secure God's words shall endure

Whatever may change, these things for sure—we believe.

So if the mountains are cast down into the plains

When the kingdoms all crumble, this one remains

Our faith is not subject to seasons of man

With our fathers we proclaim

We believe our Lord will come as He said

The land and the sea will give up their dead
His children will reign with Him as their head

We believe

We believe

Senator Klobuchar: What an amazing song. Thank you so much and the President wanted me to let you know he only had to leave early so it makes it easier for you all to get out of here. But we want to thank you for such a beautiful morning, something we will never forget and we have one last prayer, a closing prayer and Johnny will introduce our speaker.

Senator Isakson: My favorite verse in the Bible is in the first book of Thessalonians, the 5th chapter, the 16th and 17th verses—"Rejoice evermore." And certainly after this morning's message from Secretary of State Clinton and the gifted musicians that we heard from, Ralph Freeman, Bob Fraumann and MaryKay Messenger, we have had a reason to rejoice this morning. But in addition, the second verse says "Pray without ceasing," and I can not think of a more appropriate person to close today than the young man of great gift and talent on the gridiron, who lives his faith and ministers around the world sharing with others. A role model for the youth of America, the University of Florida quarterback, the Heisman Trophy Winner, Mr. Tim Tebow.

Mr. Tim Tebow: It is actually rather incredible that a Georgia Bulldog would invite a Florida Gator. So you can actually see the hand of God here today already. Madam Secretary, Senators, distinguished guests, thank you so much for this opportunity. Now if you would, please bow your heads and pray with me right now.

Dear Jesus, thank you for this day. Thank you for bringing together so many people that have a platform to influence people for you. Lord, as we disperse today let us be united in love, hope and peace. Lord, let us come together as one and break down all the barriers in between us that separate us. Lord, you came to seek and save those who were lost and we thank you for that. Lord, we don't know what the future holds but we know who holds the future and in that there is peace and in that there is comfort and in that there is hope. Lord, we pray for the people all over the world who are hurting right now, Lord. And the first thing that comes to mind is James 1, verses 2 through 4, "Consider all joy my brethren when you encounter various trials, knowing that the testing of your faith produces endurance and let endurance have its perfect result, that you may be perfect and complete, lacking in nothing." And we pray for the people in Haiti right now, Lord, that you make them perfect and complete because you love them and you have a plan for their lives, just like you do with our lives right now. So my prayer is as we leave today, we are united as one because of you. We love you and thank you. In Jesus' name, Amen.

Senator Isakson: Thank you for attending. We look forward to seeing you at the 59th Prayer Breakfast next year.

Senator Klobuchar: Thank you.

HONORING OUR ARMED FORCES

SPECIALIST WILLIAM C. YAUCH

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, today I honor SPC William C. Yauch, 23, of Batesville who died in Jalula, Iraq, in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom. According to initial reports, Specialist Yauch died of injuries sustained when a vehicle-borne improvised explosive device detonated near his patrol. He is survived by his wife of Batesville, his mother of Cave City, and his father of Saint Charles, MO.

My heart goes out to the family of Specialist Yauch who made the ultimate sacrifice on behalf of our Nation. Along with all Arkansans, I am grateful for his service and for the service and sacrifice of all of our military servicemembers and their families. I am committed to ensuring they have the full support that they need and deserve. Our grateful Nation will not forget them when their military service is complete.

More than 11,000 Arkansans on active duty and more than 10,000 Arkansas reservists have served in Iraq or Afghanistan since September 11, 2001. These men and women have shown tremendous courage and perseverance through the most difficult of times. As neighbors, as Arkansans, and as Americans, it is incumbent upon us to do everything we can to honor their service and to provide for them and their families, not only when they are in harm's way but also when they return home. It is the least we can do for those whom we owe so much.

Specialist Yauch was assigned to B Company, 5th Battalion, 20th Infantry Regiment, 2nd Infantry Division, Joint Base Lewis-McChord, WA.

REMEMBERING COLONEL WILLIAM H. MASON AND CHIEF MASTER SERGEANT THOMAS E. KNEBEL

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, today I pay tribute to two airmen from Arkansas, Air Force COL William H. Mason of Camden and CMSGT. Thomas E. Knebel of Midway, who bravely gave their lives during the Vietnam War, but whose ultimate fate had remained unknown. During a recent ceremony at Arlington National Cemetery, Colonel Mason and Chief Master Sergeant Knebel along with their crew members were given full military honors for their sacrifice.

On May 22, 1968, these men were aboard a C-130A Hercules on an evening flare mission over northern Salavan Province, Laos. Fifteen minutes after the aircraft made a radio call, the crew of another U.S. aircraft observed a large ground fire near the last known location of the aircraft. Search and rescue could not be attempted due to heavy anti-aircraft fire in the area.

The fate of the plane and its crew was a mystery for decades. Military investigators pursued numerous leads before locating the crash site just inside Vietnam in 2000, then spent several more years trying to identify human remains at the site.

After years of uncertainty, the families of Colonel Mason and Chief Master Sergeant Knebel can now be at peace knowing the remains of their loved ones have been found.

My heart goes out to the families of these airmen, who made the ultimate sacrifice on behalf of our Nation. Along with all Arkansans, I am grateful for the service and sacrifice of all of our military servicemembers and their families. I am committed to ensuring they have the full support that they need and deserve. As Arkansans, and as Americans, it is incumbent upon us to do everything we can to honor their service. It is the least we can do for those whom we owe so much.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

WYNDMERE, NORTH DAKOTA

• Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I wish to recognize a community in North Dakota celebrating its 125th anniversary. On June 25 through 27, the residents of Wyndmere will gather to celebrate their community's history and founding.

In 1883, when North Dakota was just part of the Dakota territories, the city of Wyndmere was founded. It was named after Windermere Lake in Westmorelandshire, England, which derived from the combination of "wynd," meaning a narrow lane, and "mere," a pool or lake. The post office was established in 1884, and the Soo Line railroad crossed through town in 1888. The town flourished and became known as the Corn Capital of North Dakota.

The city was named a boom town in 1903 with multiple banks, physicians, blacksmith shops, jewelry stores, newspapers, and other businesses signaling its prosperity. Today, the city of Wyndmere and its residents are lucky to live with America's countryside in their backyard. With Sheyenne National Grasslands to enjoy, it is no surprise to find such a happy community. Wyndmere will celebrate its quasiquicentennial with activities including an all school reunion and a parade.

I ask the Senate to join me in congratulating Wyndmere, ND, and its residents on their first 125 years and in wishing them well in the future. By honoring Wyndmere and all the other historic small towns of North Dakota, we keep the great tradition of the pioneering frontier spirit alive for future generations. It is places such as Wyndmere that have helped to shape this country into what it is today, which is why the community of Wyndmere is deserving of our recognition.

Wyndmere has a proud past and a bright future.●

REMEMBERING JOHN W. DOUGLAS

• Mr. DODD. Mr. President, today I wish to honor the life and career of John Woolman Douglas, who passed away on June 6, 2010, at the age of 88.

We are all familiar with the images of the 1963 civil rights march, which took place here in Washington, DC, and is still one of the largest demonstrations of its kind in the Nation's history. It was during this march, in front of the Lincoln Memorial, with the National Mall flooded with demonstrators, that Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. delivered his iconic "I Have a Dream" speech.

The images of that day, and of Dr. King's speech, have left an indelible mark on U.S. history. These events are remembered as some of the most important moments in the struggle against racial discrimination. They are also remembered as a nonviolent and hopeful affair—a stark contrast to the violence which characterized earlier demonstrations in the deep south.

Much of the credit for the success of this historic event goes to the tireless work of an Assistant Attorney General at the Justice Department. His name was John Douglas. As the head of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, Douglas was charged by President Kennedy with the responsibility for the logistics and security of the march. For five weeks in the summer of 1963, he worked tirelessly with local law enforcement, the march's organizers, and the city of Washington to ensure a peaceful, effective demonstration.

Though his efforts went largely unnoticed to most Americans, it was vital to the success of this iconic event. It was also a testament to Mr. Douglas's personal belief in ensuring that the laws of our nation protect and promote the civil rights of all citizens.

His commitment to the rule of law, and to the advancement of basic human and civil rights in the United States and across the globe, helped John Douglas find himself at the forefront of some of the most significant moments of the 20th century—events that helped shape that century into one of progress and promise.

The son of the late U.S. Senator Paul Douglas, John was a 1943 graduate of Princeton University. After serving in the Navy during World War II as an officer on a PT boat in the Pacific, he enrolled at Yale Law School, in my home State of Connecticut. In 1948, he went on to London as a Rhodes Scholar and returned to clerk for Supreme Court Justice Harold Burton. He then embarked upon a career in private law practice and in government, during which he sought to advance the cause of justice both at home and abroad.

In 1962, Douglas was one of four men who negotiated the release of more than 1,000 anti-communist prisoners, captured and held by Cuban leader Fidel Castro after the Bay of Pigs invasion. He then served in the Kennedy Justice Department, where he was Assistant Attorney General until leaving to help his father run his final campaign for U.S. Senate in 1966.

Upon returning to private practice, he served as cochairman of the Lawyer's Committee for Civil Rights Under Law. In 1970, he learned that schools in the South were still placing black students in separate classes and preventing them from participating in after school activities. Under his direction dozens of volunteers travelled to the South to assist in taking legal action to stop these injustices. Throughout the 1970s and 80s, he continued working actively on civil rights issues, serving as the cochairman of the Washington Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights and Urban Affairs, and also as president of the National Legal Aid and Defender Association.

Internationally, Mr. Douglas worked to advance human rights through the development of democracy across the globe. In 1985, he traveled to South Africa, where he demonstrated against apartheid. He then returned to that nation as an official election observer in 1994—the year that Nelson Mandela was elected as President of South Africa in the first multi-racial election in that nation's history. He also served as an election monitor in the African nation of Namibia on three occasions in the 1980s and 1990s.

When he saw the rule of law warped into the tool of oppressive regimes, John Douglas stood courageously on the side of justice and human rights. As chairman of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace from 1978 to 1986, he advocated for international arms controls. He also travelled to Chile in 1986 to protest the violent, oppressive regime of General Augusto Pinochet.

Clearly, he knew, just as my father Thomas Dodd, one of the lead prosecutors of the Nuremberg trials did, that the law is humanity's strongest and noblest weapon against tyranny and oppression. This is a fundamental value that John Douglas truly took to heart, and throughout his career he fought for the rule of law over the rule of the mob both at home and abroad.

His contributions to the advancement of these principles shall never be forgotten, and I extend my deepest condolences to his family for their loss.●

TRIBUTE TO DR. JEFF KIMPEL

● Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, when a tornado or severe weather event threatens the lives and property of our citizens across the country, few know that a hard-working, unsung hero is directing the National Severe Storms Laboratory in Norman, OK, to provide advanced weather forecasting on these threats. Our friend and colleague, Dr. Jeff Kimpel, Director of the NSSL, is retiring after 13 years of Federal service as the Director of the National Severe Storms Laboratory in Norman, OK. He will be sorely missed.

As my colleagues in the Senate know, the NSSL is best known for developing Doppler weather radar technology that led to the establishment of the national NEXRAD network consisting of more than 150 radar systems. During Dr. Kimpel's watch, NSSL performed the scientific and technological research that upgraded the NEXRADs from proprietary to open systems, added superresolution capability and designed dual-polarization upgrades. Dual-polarization will significantly increase the accuracy of rainfall estimates, delineate rain from snow, and provide an estimate of hail size. Since its installation, the NEXRAD program has reduced tornado-related deaths by 45 percent and personal injuries by 40 percent.

Under Dr. Kimpel's leadership, NSSL established strong programs in short-term cloud-resolving, numerical forecast models that are designed to yield estimates of hazardous weather events including tornadoes, windstorms, lightning, hail, and heavy precipitation. He championed radar-based rainfall analyses for flash flood and river forecasting. He was instrumental in establishing support for new facilities for NSSL that led to the eventual construction of the magnificent National Weather Center building shared with the National Weather Service and the University of Oklahoma Meteorology Program. He supported NSSL scientists and equipment to participate in 17 national and international field studies including the high profile Verification of the Origin of Tornadoes Experiment.

While Dr. Kimpel served as Director, NSSL scientists published over 600 archival, refereed journal articles, obtained 3 patents, and participated in 4 Cooperative Research and Development Agreements with private companies. NSSL employees achieved many honors and recognitions during his tenure including a NSSL affiliate being elected to the National Academy of Sciences, a senior researcher being elected to the National Academy of Engineering, and two junior colleagues being invited to the White House as winners of the Presidential Early Career Award for Scientists and Engineers.

Dr. Kimpel's legacy at NSSL will be his establishment of far-reaching research programs designed to vastly improve weather and water warnings and forecasts. He worked tirelessly to launch the Multifunction Phased Array Radar initiative as a possible eventual replacement for NEXRAD. He worked with the NWS Storm Prediction Center and the Norman Weather Forecast Office to establish the Hazardous Weather Testbed to accelerate the transition of new science into operational warning and forecasting decision processes. He worked with others to support the Warn-on-Forecast initiative that envisions a time when severe weather warnings will be issued using numerical guidance in addition to the present method of detecting precursors or the event itself. Dr. Kimpel expanded NSSL's radar-based flash flood forecasting and water management programs into coastal areas where inundation from land-falling tropical storms and hurricanes is possible.

Prior to becoming the Director of NSSL, Dr. Kimpel served in the U.S. Air Force, including a tour in Vietnam for which he was awarded the Bronze Star. He earned his graduate degrees at the University of Wisconsin before joining the meteorology faculty at the University of Oklahoma. He achieved the rank of full professor and held a number of administrative positions including dean of the College of Geosciences and provost and senior vice president of the Norman Campus. He was named a Fellow of the American Meteorological Society, is a certified, consulting meteorologist, and was elected president of the AMS in 2000. He chaired both the National Science Foundation's Advisory Committee for Atmospheric Sciences and the Board of Trustees of the University Corporation for the Atmospheric Sciences. Dr. Kimpel plans on remaining in Norman and spending more time with his five children and two grandchildren.

Is there an unsung hero protecting Americans? Yes—that hero to all of us is Dr. Jeff Kimpel. We wish him well in his future pursuits, and all of us continue to support those research and day-to-day operations he has championed at the NSSL in severe weather detection, research, and forecasting.●

TRIBUTE TO BOBBY SOUTHARD

● Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, today I recognize Police Chief Bobby Southard of Hot Springs, AR. After a 22-year law enforcement career, Chief Southard will retire at the end of June.

Hired as a police officer in 1988, Chief Southard has enjoyed a successful career, serving as sergeant, lieutenant, captain, acting chief of police, and in February 2007 was selected as chief of the 129-person department.

Along with all Arkansans, I recognize the courage, bravery, and dedication of our Arkansas law enforcement, who risk their lives each day to keep our citizens safe. I thank these public servants for their service and sacrifice.●

TRIBUTE TO DR. FAUST ALVAREZ

● Mr. TESTER. Mr. President, today I announce to the Senate that after 24 years as chief of staff for the VA Montana Health Care System, Dr. Faust M. Alvarez, MD, has decided to retire. Dr. Alvarez was appointed chief of staff in August 1986 and continued in that position until April 30, 2010. He began his career as a staff physician at Fort Harrison Medical Center in 1984. Prior to joining the VA system he was engaged in private practice in the city of Helena for 12 years. During this time he founded and directed the first Montana hemodialysis unit and renal program at St. Peter's Hospital.

When Dr. Alvarez became the chief of staff at the VA, he sought to provide Montana's veterans with a high quality standard of care, and to provide easier access to medical services. These were challenging goals given that the VA Montana Health Care System has only one hospital and Montana is the fourth largest State geographically. Furthermore Montana has the second largest per capita veteran populations in the country. Through hard work and dedication, he and his staff have achieved these goals and have made the VA Montana Health Care System what it is today.

In 1988 Dr. Alvarez began expanding services for veterans by creating satellite clinics. The first clinics were opened in Anaconda and Kalispell. Today the VA Montana Health Care System has a presence in every major city in the state through 12 satellite outpatient facilities. Three of these facilities have telemedicine access and more are to be activated.

Through Dr. Alvarez's leadership and the hard working personnel of VA Montana, the VA Montana Medical System has been recognized on numerous occasions for its quality medical services. In 2005 the VA Montana was selected as the Nation's VA hospital of the year. Dr. Alvarez believes that Montana's veterans should expect and receive the highest quality medical care and services, and he has strived to ensure this expectation is met. By hiring board certified medical personnel, acquiring new state of the art equipment and incorporating current medical trends into the provision of healthcare services at VA Montana, Dr. Alvarez, and his staff, have made the VA Montana Health Care System the facility of choice for veterans across the State.

I thank Dr. Alvarez for his dedicated years of service. We are all proud of his accomplishments at VA Montana and the positive affect that the VA has had across the State during his tenure. I appreciate his initiative and hard work to continually improve medical services for Montana's veterans and to ensure our veterans receive appropriate care. I am certain that those who come after will maintain the same level of commitment and leadership.

Dr. Alvarez is a fellow of the American College of Physicians, an honorary designation recognizing scholarly and professional achievements in internal medicine. Dr. Alvarez was appointed by various Governors of the State of Montana to the State Board of Medical Examiners where he served for a total of 18 years.

Dr. Alvarez is retired from the U.S. Army Reserve where he served as a colonel and regional flight surgeon. He was also State medical commander for the Montana National Guard as well as flight surgeon to the 189th Aviation Battalion. During his service he received multiple decorations, including five Commendation Medals and five Meritorious Service Medals. Upon retirement, he received the Legion of Merit for exceptional meritorious conduct in the performance of outstanding services and achievements.

Dr. Alvarez and his wife of 43 years, Marie, have been dedicated to and are actively involved in the Helena community. They created the Dr. Faust M. & Marie Alvarez Scholarship in 1975. It is awarded annually to a deserving Carroll College student demonstrating academic integrity and financial need majoring in biology or a health-field program. Dr. Alvarez has also served as a member of the Regional Airport Board and as a senior FAA medical examiner. Both he and Marie are pilots.

He also enjoys restoring classic automobiles and building fine wood furniture. He has five daughters and four grandchildren.

Dr. Alvarez has been an outstanding civil servant. I thank him for his service and what he has done for Montana's veterans. I wish him and his wife the best in their future endeavors.●

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petition or memorial was laid before the Senate and was referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM-123. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the State of Alaska relative to the mining and processing of rare earth elements in Alaska and to the stockpiling of rare earth elements; and urging Congress to pass H.R. 4866; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

SENATE RESOLVE NO. 8

Whereas the United States once was largely self-sufficient in rare earth elements; and Whereas mineable concentrations of rare earth elements are not commonly found; and Whereas rare earth elements are exceptionally valuable because of their unique chemical, electrical, and physical properties; and

Whereas the unique chemical, electrical, and physical properties of rare earth elements make them indispensable for a wide variety of emerging critical technologies, and, in particular, technologies needed for defense and clean energy applications; and

Whereas the United States has become almost entirely dependent on foreign sources of yttrium, niobium, and rare earth elements, as well as associated elements of tantalum and zirconium; and

Whereas dysprosium and terbium are among the scarcest, most valuable, and most sought after rare earth metals needed for green technology and military applications; and

Whereas the value-added technology and skill to allow both the recovery of rare earth elements from mineral forms in ore and the manufacture of finished products, such as magnets, from rare earth elements has almost entirely migrated to China, as has the actual mining of rare earth ores; and

Whereas China currently accounts for 97 percent of the world's production of rare earth elements; and

Whereas China has reduced its exports of rare earth elements; and

Whereas a future in which manufacturing of wind turbines, solar panels, advanced batteries, and geothermal steam turbines are produced only outside of the United States poses a risk to the country; and

Whereas, after extraction of rare earth ores, processing, refining, and production are needed to provide the United States with self-reliance in these technologies; and

Whereas, in contrast to rare earth element deposits found elsewhere in the United States, Bokan Mountain discoveries on the southern end of Prince of Wales Island are rich in the heavy rare earth elements of eu-ropium, gadolinium, terbium, dysprosium, thulium, holmium, erbium, ytterbium, lutetium, and yttrium; and

Whereas continued exploration, together with the establishment of secondary processing and research facilities in Alaska, would result in new career opportunities for Alaskans; and

Whereas current economic opportunities on Prince of Wales Island and throughout Alaska have significantly decreased; and

Whereas the federal Tongass National Forest Land and Resource Management Plan has been completed and the Bokan Mountain area zoned for mineral development; and

Whereas the state's Prince of Wales Island Area Plan has been completed and the Kendrick Bay area classified for mineral and forestry access and development; and

Whereas overland access and transport requirements in the Tongass National Forest are mitigated by immediate access to the mining property by ocean transport; and

Whereas H.R. 4866 has been introduced in the United States Congress to reestablish a competitive domestic rare earth elements production industry, a domestic rare earth processing, refining, purification, and metals production industry, a domestic rare earth metals alloying industry, and a domestic rare earth-based magnet production industry and supply chain in the United States; Be it Resolved, That the Senate urges the United States Congress expeditiously to pass H.R. 4866; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senate recommends continued exploration of rare earth deposits in Alaska, the issuance of permits, as promptly as allowed by law, for extraction, processing, and production of rare earth materials on the Bokan Mountain properties, and commencement of planning for extraction, processing, and production of rare earth materials by industry.

Copies of this resolution shall be sent to the Honorable Ike Skelton, Chair of the Armed Services Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives; the Honorable Sander M. Levin, Acting Chair of the Ways and Means Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives; the Honorable Barney Frank, Chair of the Financial Services Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives; the Honorable Lisa Murkowski and the Honorable Mark Begich, U.S. Senators, and the Honorable Don Young, U.S. Representative, members of the Alaska delegation in Congress; and all other members of the 111th United States Congress.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. LIEBERMAN (for himself and Mr. DODD):

S. 3498. A bill to support the establishment and operation of Teachers Professional Development Institutes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation, along with my friend and colleague, the senior Senator from Connecticut, Mr. DODD, that will strengthen the content knowledge and instructional skills of our present K-12 teacher workforce and thus ultimately raise student achievement.

The Teachers Professional Development Institutes Act would establish eight new Teachers Professional Development Institutes throughout the nation each year over the next 5 years based on the model which has been operating at Yale University for over 30 years. Every Teachers Institute would consist of a partnership between an institution of higher education and the local public school system in which a significant proportion of the students come from low-income households. These Institutes will strengthen the present teacher workforce by giving each participant an opportunity to gain more sophisticated content knowledge and a chance to develop curriculum units with other colleagues that can be directly applied in their classrooms. We know that teachers gain confidence and enthusiasm when they have a deeper understanding of the subject matter that they teach and this translates into higher expectations for their students and an increase in student achievement.

The Teachers Professional Development Institutes are based on the Yale-New Haven Teachers Institute model that has been in existence since 1978. For over 30 years, the Institute has offered, 5 or 6 13-session seminars each year, led by Yale faculty, on topics that teachers have selected to enhance their mastery of the specific subject area that they teach. The subject selection process begins with representatives from the Institutes soliciting ideas from teachers throughout the school district for topics on which teachers feel they need to have additional preparation, topics that will assist them in preparing materials they need for their students, and topics that will assist them in addressing the standards that the school district requires. As a consensus emerges about desired seminar subjects, the Institute director identifies university faculty members with the appropriate expertise, interest and desire to lead the seminar. University faculty members, especially those who have led Institute seminars before, may sometimes suggest seminars they would like to lead, and these ideas are circulated by the representatives as well. The final decisions on which seminar topics are offered are ultimately made by the teachers who participate. In this way, the offerings are designed to respond to what teachers believe is needed and useful for both themselves and their students.

The cooperative nature of the Institute seminar planning process ensures its success. Institutes offer seminars and relevant materials on topics teachers have identified and feel are needed for their own preparation, as well as what they know will motivate and engage their students. Teachers enthusiastically take part in rigorous seminars they have requested, and practice using the materials they have obtained and developed. This helps ensure that the experience not only increases their preparation in the subjects they are assigned to teach, but also their participation in an Institute seminar gives them immediate hands-on active learning materials that can be used in the classroom. In short, by allowing teachers to determine the seminar subjects and providing them the resources to develop relevant curricula for their classroom and their students, the Institutes empower teachers.

The Yale-New Haven Teachers Institute conducted a National Demonstration Project from 1999-2002 that showed that similar Institutes could be created rapidly at diverse sites with large concentrations of disadvantaged students. After 2 years of research and planning, and based on the success of that Project, the Institute in 2005 launched the Yale National Initiative to strengthen teaching in public schools, a long-term endeavor to assist with the establishment of Teachers Institutes of this specific type in most states. As a result, new Institutes already have been established in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and Charlotte, North Carolina; and Institutes are currently being planned for New Castle County, Delaware, and San Francisco, California.

The teachers surveyed for the National Demonstration Project reported that student motivation, student interest, and student mastery were higher during the Institute-developed unit than during other work. Subsequently, the findings of a 2009 Report on Teachers Institute Experiences found that teachers participated out of desires to obtain curricula which suited their needs, increased subject mastery, and motivated students. Mr. President, 96 percent of the teachers rated the Institute seminars as useful, partly due to the reported increase in knowledge and in raising expectations of their students.

A retrospective study showed that over a 5-year period Teachers Institute participants were almost twice as likely as non-participants to remain teaching in the district five years later. Research has shown that longevity in a district is associated with teaching effectiveness.

Many agree that teacher quality is the single most important school-related factor in determining student achievement. High-quality teacher professional development programs that focus on subject and pedagogy knowledge are a proven method for enhancing the effectiveness of a teacher in the classroom. A recent review of professional development studies by the Department of Education's Institute of Education Sciences found that "teachers who receive substantial professional development—an average of 49 hours in the nine studies—can boost their students' achievement by about 21 percentile points."

The Yale-New Haven Teachers Institute model enhances teachers' basic writing, math, and presentation skills. It increases expectations of student achievement and enthusiasm for teaching while developing skills for motivating students. These are key features that research suggests are effective in producing gains in both teacher knowledge and practice and student achievement. The Teachers Institutes accomplish student achievement gains through a proven approach distinguished from both conventional professional development offerings of school districts and from traditional continuing education and outreach programs of colleges and universities.

Education Secretary Arne Duncan said recently, "The more we can provide high-quality professional development, so that teachers have deep content knowledge, there are huge benefits. . . . So whether it's partnerships with universities and higher ed institutions, to create those meaningful professional development opportunities and really create those content-rich environments that students desperately need, that is absolutely critically important."

This is precisely what the Teachers Professional Development Institutes Act strives to accomplish. The need for effective teachers with deep content knowledge is most apparent and urgent in schools and school districts that enroll a high proportion of students from low-income families, exactly the schools and school districts that Teachers Institutes serve.

The Yale-New Haven Teachers Institute has already proven to be a successful model for teacher professional development as demonstrated by the high caliber curriculum unit plans that teacher participants have developed and placed on the web, and by the evaluations that support the conclusion that virtually all the teacher participants felt substantially strengthened in their mastery of content knowledge and their teaching skills. The finding that Institute participants were almost twice as likely as non-participants to remain in teaching in high-need schools is especially encouraging. Our proposal would open this opportunity to many more teachers in high-need schools throughout the Nation.

I urge my colleagues to act favorably on this measure.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3498

By Mr. AKAKA:

S. 3499. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to require fiduciaries of individuals receiving benefits under laws administered by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to authorize the Secretary to obtain financial records with respect to such individuals for purposes of administering such laws, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans’ Affairs.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, as Chairman of the Senate Committee on Veterans’ Affairs, I introduce legislation that would provide VA with the means to better protect those VA beneficiaries who have fiduciaries appointed to look after their affairs. This bill would improve oversight of fiduciaries by authorizing VA to access records at financial institutions for up to 3 years.

Under current law, VA has a 3-month time limit on the authorization to view financial records maintained by a fiduciary, a time period which has proven to be inadequate. In addition, VA lacks the authority to compel a fiduciary to provide a Social Security number or other identifying information needed to track financial records.

The legislation I am introducing today is modeled on Social Security laws and procedures. It will help VA ensure that veterans’ monies are not being misused. It would allow VA to require that any person appointed or recognized by VA as a fiduciary be required to sign an authorization for release of records which would be in effect for up to 3 years. If a fiduciary refuses to sign or revokes an authorization, VA would be authorized to remove the fiduciary.

The Committee held a hearing on pending legislation on May 19, 2010, and witnesses from The American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars spoke on the need to strengthen VA’s oversight of fiduciaries.

I urge our colleagues to support this bill to protect VA beneficiaries who need assistance with financial management.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3499

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Fiduciary Benefits Oversight Act of 2010”.

SEC. 2. ACCESS BY SECRETARY OF VETERANS AFFAIRS TO FINANCIAL RECORDS OF INDIVIDUALS REPRESENTED BY FIDUCIARIES AND RECEIVING BENEFITS UNDER LAWS ADMINISTERED BY SECRETARY.

Section 5502 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(f)(1) The Secretary may require any person appointed or recognized as a fiduciary for a Department beneficiary under this section to provide authorization for the Secretary to obtain (subject to the cost reimbursement requirements of section 1115(a) of the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3415)) from any financial institution any financial record held by the institution with respect to the fiduciary or the beneficiary whenever the Secretary determines that the financial record is necessary—

“(A) for the administration of a program administered by the Secretary; or “(B) in order to safeguard the beneficiary’s benefits against neglect, misappropriation, misuse, embezzlement, or fraud.

“(2) Notwithstanding section 1104(a)(1) of such Act (12 U.S.C. 3404(a)(1)), an authorization provided by a fiduciary under paragraph (1) with respect to a beneficiary shall remain effective until the earliest of—

“(A) the approval by a court or the Secretary of a final accounting of payment of benefits under any law administered by the Secretary to a fiduciary on behalf of such beneficiary;

“(B) in the absence of any evidence of neglect, misappropriation, misuse, embezzlement, or fraud, the express revocation by the fiduciary of the authorization in a written notification to the Secretary; or

“(C) the date that is three years after the date of the authorization.

“(3)(A) An authorization obtained by the Secretary pursuant to this subsection shall be considered to meet the requirements of the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3401 et seq.) for purposes of section 1103(a) of such Act (12 U.S.C. 3403(a)), and need not be furnished to the financial institution, notwithstanding section 1104(a) of such Act (12 U.S.C. 3404(a)), if the Secretary provides a copy of the authorization to the financial institution.

“(B) The certification requirements of section 1103(b) of such Act (12 U.S.C. 3403(b)) shall not apply to requests by the Secretary pursuant to an authorization provided under this subsection.

“(C) A request for a financial record by the Secretary pursuant to an authorization provided by a fiduciary under this subsection is deemed to meet the requirements of section 1104(a)(3) of such Act (12 U.S.C. 3404(a)(3)) and the matter in section 1102 of such Act (12 U.S.C. 3402) that precedes paragraph (1) of such section if such request identifies the fiduciary and the beneficiary concerned.

“(D) The Secretary shall inform any person who provides authorization under this subsection of the duration and scope of the authorization.

“(E) If a fiduciary of a Department beneficiary refuses to provide, or revokes, any authorization to permit the Secretary to obtain from any financial institution any financial record concerning benefits paid by the Secretary for such beneficiary, the Secretary may, on that basis, revoke the appointment or the recognition of the fiduciary for such beneficiary and for any other Department beneficiary for whom such fiduciary has been appointed or recognized. If the appointment or recognition of a fiduciary is revoked, benefits may be paid as provided in subsection (d).

“(4) For purposes of section 1113(d) of such Act (12 U.S.C. 3413(d)), a disclosure pursuant to this subsection shall be considered a disclosure pursuant to a Federal statute.

“(5) In this subsection:

“(A) The term ‘fiduciary’ includes any person appointed or recognized to receive payment of benefits under any law administered by the Secretary on behalf of a Department beneficiary.

“(B) The term ‘financial institution’ has the meaning given such term in section 1101 of such Act (12 U.S.C. 3401), except that such term shall also include any benefit association, insurance company, safe deposit company, money-market mutual fund, or similar entity authorized to do business in any State.

“(C) The term ‘financial record’ has the meaning given such term in such section.”.

Whereas, according to the National Eye Institute, in public opinion polls, Americans—

(1) have consistently identified the fear of vision loss as second only to the fear of developing cancer; and

(2) have stated that the loss of vision would have the greatest impact on their lives;

Whereas the National Eye Institute estimates that more than 11,000,000 people in the United States have common vision problems;

Whereas, according to the National Eye Institute, approximately 35,000,000 people in the United States experience an age-related eye disease, including age-related macular degeneration (the leading cause of vision loss in older people of the United States), glaucoma, diabetic retinopathy, and cataracts;

Whereas, according to the National Eye Institute, the number of people in the United States who experience an age-related eye disease is expected to grow to 50,000,000 by 2020;

Whereas, according to the National Eye Institute, the Hispanic and African-American populations experience a disproportionate incidence of glaucoma, cataracts, and diabetic retinopathy;

Whereas, according to the National Eye Institute, diabetic retinopathy is the leading cause of blindness in individuals of all races between the ages of 25 and 74;

Whereas vision impairment and eye disease are major public health issues, especially as 2010 begins the decade in which, according to the Census Bureau, more than ½ of the 78,000,000 Baby Boomers will turn 65 and be at greatest risk for developing an age-related eye disease;

Whereas much can be done to preserve eyesight with early detection and treatment;

Whereas EyeCare America, the public service program of the Foundation of the American Academy of Ophthalmology, works to ensure that eye health is not neglected by matching eligible patients with 1 of nearly 7,000 volunteer ophthalmologists across the United States committed to preventing unnecessary blindness in their communities;

Whereas the volunteer ophthalmologists provide eye exams and eyecare for up to 1 year at no out-of-pocket cost to the patient, and seniors who do not have insurance receive the care at no charge;

Whereas individuals may call EyeCare America toll-free at 1-800-222-EYES (3937) to see if they are eligible to be referred to a volunteer ophthalmologist throughout the United States; and

Whereas EyeCare America has helped more than 1,000,000 people since the inception of the organization in 1985 and is the largest public service program of its kind in United States medicine as of the date of agreement to this resolution: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate commends EyeCare America for its volunteerism and efforts to preserve eyesight throughout the 25 years preceding the date of agreement to this resolution.

SENATE RESOLUTION 558—DESIGNATING THE WEEK BEGINNING SEPTEMBER 12, 2010, AS “NATIONAL DIRECT SUPPORT PROFESSIONALS RECOGNITION WEEK”

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska (for himself, Mr. KERRY, Mr. BROWNBACK, Mr. DODD, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. JOHANNES, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. BUNNING, Mr. CARPER, Mr. BROWN of Ohio, and Mr. UDALL of Colorado) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 558

Whereas direct support workers, direct care workers, personal assistants, personal attendants, in-home support workers, and paraprofessionals (referred to in this preamble as “direct support professionals”) are the primary providers of publicly funded long term support and services for millions of individuals;

Whereas a direct support professional must build a close, trusted relationship with an individual with disabilities;

Whereas a direct support professional assists an individual with disabilities with the most intimate needs, on a daily basis;

Whereas direct support professionals provide a broad range of support, including—

- (1) preparation of meals;
- (2) helping with medications;
- (3) bathing;
- (4) dressing;

Whereas direct support professionals enable individuals with disabilities to live meaningful, productive lives;

Whereas direct support professionals are the key to allowing an individual with disabilities to live successfully in the community of the individual, and to avoid more costly institutional care;

Whereas the majority of direct support professionals are female, and many are the sole breadwinners of their families;

Whereas direct support professionals work and pay taxes, but many remain impoverished and are eligible for the same Federal and State public assistance programs on which the individuals with disabilities served by the direct support professionals must depend;

Whereas Federal and State policies, as well as the Supreme Court, in Olmstead v. L.C., 527 U.S. 581 (1999), assert the right of an individual to live in the home and community of the individual;

Whereas, in 2010, the majority of direct support professionals are employed in home and community-based settings and this trend is projected to increase over the next decade;

Whereas there is a documented critical and growing shortage of direct support professionals in every community throughout the United States; and

Whereas many direct support professionals are forced to leave jobs due to inadequate wages and benefits, creating high turnover and vacancy rates that research demonstrates adversely affects the quality of support to individuals with disabilities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(B) history should be regarded as a means for understanding the past and solving the challenges of the future.

TITLE VIII—ALASKA COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT QUOTA PROGRAM

SEC. 801. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the “Western Alaska Community Development Organizations Tax Relief Act”.

SEC. 802. FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) In 1990, Congress established a Joint Federal-State Commission on Policies and Programs Affecting Alaska Natives to investigate economic and social conditions in rural Alaska communities that are Native villages for the purposes of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act; the Commission reported very high unemployment and widespread poverty.

(2) In 1992, the United States Secretary of Commerce approved Amendment 18 to the Bering Sea and Aleutian Island (BSAI) Fishery Management Plan creating the Western Alaska Community Development Quota (CDQ) Program to promote the economic development of the 65 villages of the western Alaska region which were organized as six coalitions.

(3) In 1994, the Commission recommended to Congress that it amend the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act to codify the establishment of the CDQ Program and expand the program to include all commercial fisheries that are conducted in the Bering Sea-Aleutian Islands Management Area.

(4) In 1996, Congress implemented the recommendation of the Commission by enacting section 305(i)(1) of the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act subparagraph (A) of which established the western Alaska community development program—

(A) to provide eligible western Alaska villages with the opportunity to participate and invest in fisheries in the Bering Sea and Aleutian Islands Management Area;

(B) to support economic development in western Alaska;

(C) to alleviate poverty and provide economic and social benefits for residents of western Alaska; and

(D) to achieve sustainable and diversified local economies in western Alaska.

(5) In 2006, Congress, in section 416 of the Conference Report to Coast Guard and Maritime Transportation Act of 2006, stated its intent that “all activities of the CDQ groups continue to be considered tax-exempt (as has been the practice since the program’s inception in 1992) so that the six CDQ groups can more readily address the pressing economic needs of the region”.

(6) The original six coalitions organized as six corporations and are recognized as tax-exempt under either section 501(c)(3) or section 501(c)(4) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(7) Today, the six CDQ organizations are making important and ongoing contributions to the economic development and the alleviation of poverty in the western Alaska region consistent with the purposes Congress has established for the CDQ Program. As the program was intended, the organizations have become bona fide participants in the BSAI commercial fisheries. The CDQ organizations are using the revenue that their participation generates to create employment and economic development opportunities that would have been impossible in western Alaska prior to the CDQ Program.

(8) The CDQ organizations have paid, and will continue to pay, income tax on income generated from their activities and investments outside of the BSAI area.

(9) Excluding income generated from the CDQ organizations’ fishery-related activities and investments inside the BSAI area from unrelated business taxable income is consistent with the intent of Congress.

SEC. 803. CLARIFICATION OF TAX-EXEMPT TREATMENT OF CERTAIN INCOME OF SIX ALASKA COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT QUOTA (CDQ) PROGRAM ORGANIZATIONS.

(a) CLARIFICATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 512(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(20) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN INCOME OF SIX ALASKA COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT QUOTA (CDQ) PROGRAM ORGANIZATIONS.—There shall be excluded all income derived from a trade or business carried on by a Community Development Quota entity identified in section 305(i)(1)(D) of the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act (16 U.S.C. 1855(i)(1)(D)) participating or investing in the harvesting, processing, transportation, sales, or marketing of fish and fish product in the Bering Sea and Aleutian Islands Management Area if the conduct of such trade or business is in furtherance of one or more of the purposes specified in section 305(i)(1)(A) of such Act. Such excluded income received after the date of the enactment of this paragraph shall be reported by such entity on the annual return required under section 6033 and in any annual report required under section 305(i)(1)(F)(ii) of such Act (16 U.S.C. 1855(i)(1)(F)(ii)).”.

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall apply to income received before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) APPLICATION TO CERTAIN WHOLLY OWNED SUBSIDIARIES.—If the assets of a trade or business described in section 512(b)(20) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as added by subsection (a)(1)) of any subsidiary wholly owned by a Community Development Quota entity identified in section 305(i)(1)(D) of the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act (16 U.S.C. 1855(i)(1)(D)) are transferred to such entity (including in liquidation of such subsidiary) not later than 18 months after the date of the enactment of this Act—

(1) no gain resulting from such transfer shall be recognized to either such subsidiary or such entity under such Code, and

(2) all income derived by such subsidiary from such transferred trade or business shall be exempt from taxation under such Code.

(3) In particular, 17 programs continue to receive funding, even though the programs have been identified by either the Bush or Obama administrations as being ineffective, outdated, or duplicative and recommended for termination in the budgets of the United States Government for fiscal years 2009, 2010, and 2011.

(a) ERISA AMENDMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 303(c)(2) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1083(c)(2)) is amended by adding at the end the following subparagraphs:

“(D) SPECIAL RULE.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of the shortfall amortization base of a plan for any applicable plan year, the shortfall amortization installments are the amounts described in clause (ii) or (iii), if made applicable by an election under clause (iv). In the absence of a timely election, such installments shall be determined without regard to this subparagraph.

“(ii) 2 PLUS 7 AMORTIZATION SCHEDULE.—The shortfall amortization installments described in this clause are—

“(I) in the case of the first 2 plan years in the 9-plan-year period beginning with the applicable plan year, interest on the shortfall amortization base (determined by using the effective interest rate for the applicable plan year), and

“(II) in the case of the last 7 plan years in such 9-plan-year period, the amounts necessary to amortize the balance of such shortfall amortization base in level annual installments over such last 7 plan years (determined using the segment rates determined under subparagraph (C) of subsection (h)(2) for the applicable plan year, applied under rules similar to the rules of subparagraph (B) of subsection (h)(2)).

“(iii) 15-YEAR AMORTIZATION.—The shortfall amortization installments described in this clause are the amounts under subparagraphs (A) and (B) determined by substituting ‘15 plan-year period’ for ‘7-plan-year period’.

“(iv) ELECTION.—

“(I) IN GENERAL.—The plan sponsor may, with respect to a plan, elect, with respect to any of not more than 2 applicable plan years, to determine shortfall amortization installments under this subparagraph. An election under either clause (ii) or clause (iii) may be made with respect to either of such applicable plan years.

“(II) ELIGIBILITY FOR ELECTION.—An election may be made to determine shortfall amortization installments under this subparagraph with respect to a plan only if, as of the date of the election—

“(aa) the plan sponsor is not a debtor in a case under title 11, United States Code, or similar Federal or State law, “(bb) there are no unpaid minimum required contributions with respect to the plan for purposes of section 4971 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986,

“(cc) there is no lien in favor of the plan under subsection (k) or under section 430(k) of such Code, and “(dd) a distress termination has not been initiated for the plan under section 4041(c).

“(III) RULES RELATING TO ELECTION.—Such election shall be made at such times, and in such form and manner, as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and shall be irrevocable, except under such limited circumstances, and subject to such conditions, as such Secretary may prescribe.

“(E) APPLICABLE PLAN YEAR.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘applicable plan year’ means, subject to the election of the plan sponsor under subparagraph (D)(iv), each of not more than 2 of the plan years beginning in 2008, 2009, 2010, or 2011.

“(ii) SPECIAL RULE RELATING TO 2008.—A plan year may be elected as an applicable plan year pursuant to this subparagraph only if the due date under subsection (j)(1) for the payment of the minimum required contribution for such plan year occurs on or after March 10, 2010.

“(F) INCREASES IN SHORTFALL AMORTIZATION INSTALLMENTS IN CASES OF EXCESS COMPENSATION OR CERTAIN DIVIDENDS OR STOCK REDEMPTIONS.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—If, with respect to an election for an applicable plan year under subparagraph (D), there is an installment acceleration amount with respect to a plan for any plan year in the restriction period (or if there is an installment acceleration amount carried forward to a plan year not in the restriction period), then the shortfall amortization installment otherwise determined and payable under this paragraph for such plan year shall be increased by such amount.

“(ii) BACK-END ADJUSTMENT TO AMORTIZATION SCHEDULE.—Subject to rules prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, if a shortfall amortization installment with respect to any shortfall amortization base for an applicable plan year is required to be increased for any plan year under clause (i), subsequent shortfall amortization installments with respect to such base shall be reduced, in reverse order of the otherwise required installments beginning with the final scheduled installment, to the extent necessary to limit the present value of such subsequent shortfall amortization installments (after application of this subparagraph) to the present value of the remaining unamortized shortfall amortization base.

“(iii) INSTALLMENT ACCELERATION AMOUNT.—For purposes of this subparagraph—

“(I) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘installment acceleration amount’ means, with respect to any plan year in a restriction period with respect to an applicable plan year, the sum of—

“(II) CUMULATIVE LIMITATION.—The installment acceleration amount for any plan year shall not exceed the excess (if any) of—

“(bb) the sum of the shortfall amortization installments for such plan year and all such preceding plan years, determined after application of subparagraph (D) (and in the case of any preceding plan year, after application of this subparagraph).

“(III) CARRYOVER OF EXCESS INSTALLMENT ACCELERATION AMOUNTS.—

“(aa) IN GENERAL.—If the installment acceleration amount for any plan year (determined without regard to subclause (II)) exceeds the limitation under subclause (II), then, subject to item (bb), such excess shall be treated as an installment acceleration amount for the succeeding plan year.

“(bb) CAP TO APPLY.—If any amount treated as an installment acceleration amount under item (aa) or this item with respect any succeeding plan year, when added to other installment acceleration amounts (determined without regard to subclause (II)) with respect to the plan year, exceeds the limitation under subclause (II), the portion of such amount representing such excess shall be treated as an installment acceleration amount with respect to the next succeeding plan year.

“(cc) LIMITATION ON YEARS TO WHICH AMOUNTS CARRIED FORWARD.—No amount shall be carried forward under item (aa) or (bb) to a plan year which begins after the last plan year in the restriction period (or after the second plan year following such last plan year in the case of an election year with respect to which 15-year amortization was elected under subparagraph (D)(iii)).

“(dd) ORDERING RULES.—For purposes of applying item (bb), installment acceleration amounts for the plan year (determined without regard to any carryover under this clause) shall be applied first against the limitation under subclause (II) and then carryovers to such plan year shall be applied against such limitation on a first-in, first-out basis.

“(iv) EXCESS EMPLOYEE COMPENSATION.—

“(I) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘excess employee compensation’ means the sum of—

“(BB) $1,000,000, plus

“(bb) the amount of assets set aside or reserved (directly or indirectly) in a trust (or other arrangement as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury), or transferred to such a trust or other arrangement, during the calendar year by a plan sponsor for purposes of paying deferred compensation of an employee under a nonqualified deferred compensation plan (as defined in section 409A of such Code) of the plan sponsor.

“(II) NO DOUBLE COUNTING.—No amount shall be taken into account under subclause (I) more than once.

“(III) EMPLOYEE REMUNERATION.—For purposes of this clause, the term ‘employee’ in-

“(IV) CERTAIN PAYMENTS UNDER EXISTING CONTRACTS.—There shall not be taken into account under subclause (I)(aa) any remuneration consisting of nonqualified deferred compensation, restricted stock (or restricted stock units), stock options, or stock appreciation rights payable or granted under a written binding contract that was in effect on March 1, 2010, and which was not modified in any material respect before such remuneration is paid.

“(V) ONLY REMUNERATION FOR POST-2009 SERVICES COUNTED.—Remuneration shall be taken into account under subclause (I)(aa) only to the extent attributable to services performed by the employee for the plan sponsor after December 31, 2009.

“(VI) COMMISSIONS.—

“(aa) IN GENERAL.—There shall not be taken into account under subclause (I)(aa) any remuneration payable on a commission basis solely on account of income directly generated by the individual performance of the individual to whom such remuneration is payable.

“(bb) SPECIFIED EMPLOYEES.—Item (aa) shall not apply in the case of any specified employee (within the meaning of section 409A(a)(2)(B)(i) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) or any employee who would be such a specified employee if the plan sponsor were a corporation described in such section.

“(VII) INDEXING OF AMOUNT.—In the case of any calendar year beginning after 2010, the dollar amount under subclause (I)(aa)(BB) shall be increased by an amount equal to—

“(aa) such dollar amount, multiplied by

“(bb) the cost-of-living adjustment determined under section 1(f)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 for the calendar year, determined by substituting ‘calendar year 2009’ for ‘calendar year 1992’ in subparagraph (B) thereof.

If the amount of any increase under clause (i) is not a multiple of $20,000, such increase shall be rounded to the next lowest multiple of $20,000.

“(v) CERTAIN DIVIDENDS AND REDEMPTIONS.—

“(I) IN GENERAL.—The dividend and redemption amount determined under this clause for any plan year is the lesser of—

“(aa) the excess of—

“(AA) the sum of the dividends paid during the plan year by the plan sponsor, plus the amounts paid for the redemption of stock of the plan sponsor redeemed during the plan year, over

“(BB) an amount equal to the average of adjusted annual net income of the plan sponsor for the last 5 fiscal years of the plan sponsor ending before such plan year, or

“(AA) the amounts paid for the redemption of stock of the plan sponsor redeemed during the plan year, plus “(BB) the excess of dividends paid during the plan year by the plan sponsor over the dividend base amount.

“(II) DEFINITIONS.—

“(aa) ADJUSTED ANNUAL NET INCOME.—For purposes of subclause (I)(aa)(BB), the term ‘adjusted annual net income’ with respect to any fiscal year means annual net income, determined in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles (before after-tax gain or loss on any sale of assets), but without regard to any reduction by reason of depreciation or amortization, except that in no event shall adjusted annual net income for any fiscal year be less than zero.

“(bb) DIVIDEND BASE AMOUNT.—For purposes of this clause, the term ‘dividend base amount’ means, with respect to a plan year, an amount equal to the greater of—

“(AA) the median of the amounts of the dividends paid during each of the last 5 fiscal years of the plan sponsor ending before such plan year, or

“(BB) the amount of dividends paid during such plan year on preferred stock that was issued on or before May 21, 2010, or that is replacement stock for such preferred stock.

“(III) ONLY CERTAIN POST-2009 DIVIDENDS AND REDEMPTIONS COUNTED.—For purposes of subclause (I) (other than for purposes of calculating the dividend base amount), there shall only be taken into account dividends declared, and redemptions occurring, after February 28, 2010.

“(IV) EXCEPTION FOR INTRA-GROUP DIVIDENDS.—Dividends paid by one member of a controlled group (as defined in section 302(d)(3)) to another member of such group shall not be taken into account under subclause (I).

“(V) EXCEPTION FOR STOCK DIVIDENDS.—Any distribution by the plan sponsor to its shareholders of stock issued by the plan sponsor shall not be taken into account under subclause (I).

“(VI) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN REDEMPTIONS.—The following shall not be taken into account under subclause (I):

“(aa) Redemptions of securities which, at the time of redemption, are not listed on an established securities market and—

“(AA) are made pursuant to a pension plan that is qualified under section 401 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 or a shareholder-approved program, or “(BB) are made on account of an employee's termination of employment with the plan sponsor, or the death or disability of a shareholder.

“(bb) Redemptions of securities which are not, immediately after issuance, listed on an established securities market and are, or had previously been—

“(AA) held, directly or indirectly, by, or for the benefit of, the Federal Government or a Federal reserve bank, or

“(III) ELECTIONS FOR MULTIPLE PLANS.—If a plan sponsor makes elections under subparagraph (D) with respect to 2 or more plans, the Secretary of the Treasury shall provide rules for the application of this subparagraph to such plans, including rules for the ratable allocation of any installment acceleration amount among such plans on the basis of each plan's relative reduction in the plan's shortfall amortization installment for the first plan year in the amortization period described in clause (i) (determined without regard to this subparagraph).

to be amortized in equal annual installments (until fully amortized) over the period—

“(I) NET INVESTMENT LOSSES.—

“(aa) IN GENERAL.—The net investment loss incurred by a plan in a plan year is equal to the excess of—

“(B) REDUCTION IN ALLOCATIONS TO QUALIFIED CAPITAL INTERESTS FOR LOANS FROM NONSERVICE- PROVIDING PARTNERS TO THE PARTNERSHIP.—For purposes of this subsection, any loan or other advance to the partnership made or guaranteed, directly or indirectly, by a partner not providing services described in subsection (c)(1) to the partnership (or any person related to such partner) shall be taken into account in determining the qualified capital interests of the partners in the partnership.

“(I) The Secretary shall configure the physician fee schedule areas using the Metropolitan Statistical Areas (each in this paragraph referred to as an ‘MSA’), as defined by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget as of the date of the enactment of this paragraph, as the basis for the fee schedule areas.

“(II) For purposes of this clause, the Secretary shall treat all areas not included in an MSA as a single rest-of-State MSA and any reference in this paragraph to an MSA shall be deemed to include a reference to such rest-of-State MSA.

“(III) The Secretary shall list all MSAs within the State by Geographic Adjustment Factor described in paragraph (2) (in this paragraph referred to as a ‘GAF’) in descending order.

“(IV) In the first iteration, the Secretary shall compare the GAF of the highest cost MSA in the State to the weighted-average GAF of all the remaining MSAs in the State. “(ii) TRANSITION.—For services furnished on or after January 1, 2012, and before January 1, 2017, in the State of California, after calculating the work, practice expense, and malpractice geographic indices that would otherwise be determined under clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) of paragraph (1)(A) for a fee schedule area determined under clause (i), if the index for a county within a fee schedule area is less than the index that would otherwise be in effect for such county, the Secretary shall instead apply the index that would otherwise be in effect for such county.

“(B) SUBSEQUENT REVISIONS.—After the transition described in subparagraph (A)(ii), not less than every 3 years the Secretary shall review and update the fee schedule areas using the methodology described in subparagraph (A)(i) and any updated MSAs as defined by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget. ###### Subtitle B—Offsets

PART I—MEDICAL LIABILITY REFORM

SEC. .11. SHORT TITLE.

This part may be cited as the “Medical Care Access Protection Act of 2010” or the “MCAP Act”.

SEC. .12. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—

(1) EFFECT ON HEALTH CARE ACCESS AND COSTS.—Congress finds that our current civil justice system is adversely affecting patient access to health care services, better patient care, and cost-efficient health care, in that the health care liability system is a costly and ineffective mechanism for resolving claims of health care liability and compensating injured patients, and is a deterrent to the sharing of information among health care professionals which impedes efforts to improve patient safety and quality of care.

(2) EFFECT ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.—Congress finds that the health care and insurance industries are industries affecting interstate commerce and the health care liability litigation systems existing throughout the United States are activities that affect interstate commerce by contributing to the high costs of health care and premiums for health care liability insurance purchased by health care system providers.

(3) EFFECT ON FEDERAL SPENDING.—Congress finds that the health care liability litigation systems existing throughout the United States have a significant effect on the amount, distribution, and use of Federal funds because of—

(A) the large number of individuals who receive health care benefits under programs operated or financed by the Federal Government; and

(B) the large number of individuals who benefit because of the exclusion from Federal taxes of the amounts spent to provide them with health insurance benefits; and

(C) the large number of health care providers who provide items or services for which the Federal Government makes payments.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this part to implement reasonable, comprehensive, and effective health care liability reforms designed to—

(1) improve the availability of health care services in cases in which health care liability actions have been shown to be a factor in the decreased availability of services;

(2) reduce the incidence of “defensive medicine” and lower the cost of health care liability insurance, all of which contribute to the escalation of health care costs;

(3) ensure that persons with meritorious health care injury claims receive fair and adequate compensation, including reasonable noneconomic damages;

(4) improve the fairness and cost-effectiveness of our current health care liability system to resolve disputes over, and provide compensation for, health care liability by reducing uncertainty in the amount of compensation provided to injured individuals; and

(5) provide an increased sharing of information in the health care system which will reduce unintended injury and improve patient care.

(12) HEALTH CARE PROVIDER.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term “health care provider” means any person (including but not limited to a physician (as defined by section 1861(r) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(r)), registered nurse, dentist, podiatrist, pharmacist, chiropractor, or optometrist) required by State or Federal law to be licensed, registered, or certified to provide health care services, and being either so licensed, registered, or certified, or exempted from such requirement by other statute or regulation.

(B) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN PROFESSIONAL ASSOCIATIONS.—For purposes of this part, a professional association that is organized under State law by an individual physician or group of physicians, a partnership or limited liability partnership formed by a group of physicians, a nonprofit health corporation certified under State law, or a company formed by a group of physicians under State law shall be treated as a health care provider under subparagraph (A).

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided for in this section, the time for the commencement of a health care lawsuit shall be 3 years after the date of manifestation of injury or 1 year after the claimant discovers, or through the use of reasonable diligence should have discovered, the injury, whichever occurs first.

(b) GENERAL EXCEPTION.—The time for the commencement of a health care lawsuit shall not exceed 3 years after the date of manifestation of injury unless the tolling of time was delayed as a result of—

(1) fraud;

(2) intentional concealment; or

(3) the presence of a foreign body, which has no therapeutic or diagnostic purpose or effect, in the person of the injured person.

(c) MINORS.—An action by a minor shall be commenced within 3 years from the date of the alleged manifestation of injury except that if such minor is under the full age of 6 years, such action shall be commenced within 3 years of the manifestation of injury, or prior to the eighth birthday of the minor, whichever provides a longer period. Such time limitation shall be tolled for minors for any period during which a parent or guardian and a health care provider or health care institution have committed fraud or collusion in the failure to bring an action on behalf of the injured minor.

(d) RULE 11 SANCTIONS.—Whenever a Federal or State court determines (whether by motion of the parties or whether on the motion of the court) that there has been a violation of Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (or a similar violation of applicable State court rules) in a health care liability action to which this part applies, the court shall impose upon the attorneys, law firms, or pro se litigants that have violated Rule 11 or are responsible for the violation, an appropriate sanction, which shall include an order to pay the other party or parties for the reasonable expenses incurred as a direct result of the filing of the pleading, motion, or other paper that is the subject of the violation, including a reasonable attorneys’ fee. Such sanction shall be sufficient to deter repetition of such conduct or comparable conduct by others similarly situated, and to compensate the party or parties injured by such conduct.

SEC. 15. COMPENSATING PATIENT INJURY.

(a) UNLIMITED AMOUNT OF DAMAGES FOR ACTUAL ECONOMIC LOSSES IN HEALTH CARE LAWSUITS.—In any health care lawsuit, nothing in this part shall limit the recovery by a claimant of the full amount of the available economic damages, notwithstanding the limitation contained in subsection (b).

(b) ADDITIONAL NONECONOMIC DAMAGES.—

(1) HEALTH CARE PROVIDERS.—In any health care lawsuit where final judgment is rendered against a health care provider, the amount of noneconomic damages recovered from the provider, if otherwise available under applicable Federal or State law, may be as much as $250,000, regardless of the number of parties other than a health care institution against whom the action is brought or the number of separate claims or actions brought with respect to the same occurrence.

(2) HEALTH CARE INSTITUTIONS.—

(A) SINGLE INSTITUTION.—In any health care lawsuit where final judgment is rendered against a single health care institution, the amount of noneconomic damages recovered from the institution, if otherwise available under applicable Federal or State law, may be as much as $250,000, regardless of the number of parties against whom the action is brought or the number of separate claims or actions brought with respect to the same occurrence.

(B) MULTIPLE INSTITUTIONS.—In any health care lawsuit where final judgment is rendered against more than one health care institution, the amount of noneconomic damages recovered from each institution, if otherwise available under applicable Federal or State law, may be as much as $250,000, regardless of the number of parties against whom the action is brought or the number of separate claims or actions brought with respect to the same occurrence, except that the total amount recovered from all such institutions in such lawsuit shall not exceed $500,000.

(c) NO DISCOUNT OF AWARD FOR NONECONOMIC DAMAGES.—In any health care lawsuit—

(1) an award for future noneconomic damages shall not be discounted to present value;

(2) the jury shall not be informed about the maximum award for noneconomic damages under subsection (b);

(3) an award for noneconomic damages in excess of the limitations provided for in subsection (b) shall be reduced either before the entry of judgment, or by amendment of the judgment after entry of judgment, and such reduction shall be made before accounting for any other reduction in damages required by law; and

(4) if separate awards are rendered for past and future noneconomic damages and the combined awards exceed the limitations described in subsection (b), the future noneconomic damages shall be reduced first.

(d) FAIR SHARE RULE.—In any health care lawsuit, each party shall be liable for that party's several share of any damages only and not for the share of any other person. Each party shall be liable only for the amount of damages allocated to such party in direct proportion to such party's percentage of responsibility. A separate judgment shall be rendered against each such party for the amount allocated to such party. For purposes of this section, the trier of fact shall determine the proportion of responsibility of each party for the claimant's harm.

SEC. 16. MAXIMIZING PATIENT RECOVERY.

(a) COURT SUPERVISION OF SHARE OF DAMAGES ACTUALLY PAID TO CLAIMANTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In any health care lawsuit, the court shall supervise the arrangements for payment of damages to protect against conflicts of interest that may have the effect of reducing the amount of damages awarded that are actually paid to claimants.

(2) CONTINGENCY FEES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In any health care lawsuit in which the attorney for a party claims a financial stake in the outcome by virtue of a contingent fee, the court shall have the power to restrict the payment of a claimant's damage recovery to such attorney, and to redirect such damages to the claimant based upon the interests of justice and principles of equity.

(B) LIMITATION.—The total of all contingent fees for representing all claimants in a health care lawsuit shall not exceed the following limits:

(i) 40 percent of the first $50,000 recovered by the claimant(s).

(ii) 33⅓ percent of the next $50,000 recovered by the claimant(s).

(iii) 25 percent of the next $500,000 recovered by the claimant(s).

(iv) 15 percent of any amount by which the recovery by the claimant(s) is in excess of $600,000.

(b) APPLICABILITY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The limitations in subsection (a) shall apply whether the recovery is by judgment, settlement, mediation, arbitration, or any other form of alternative dispute resolution.

(2) MINORS.—In a health care lawsuit involving a minor or incompetent person, a court retains the authority to authorize or approve a fee that is less than the maximum permitted under this section.

(c) EXPERT WITNESSES.—

(1) REQUIREMENT.—No individual shall be qualified to testify as an expert witness concerning issues of negligence in any health care lawsuit against a defendant unless such individual—

(A) except as required under paragraph (2), is a health care professional who—

(i) is appropriately credentialed or licensed in 1 or more States to deliver health care services; and

(ii) typically treats the diagnosis or condition or provides the type of treatment under review; and

(B) can demonstrate by competent evidence that, as a result of training, education, knowledge, and experience in the evaluation, diagnosis, and treatment of the disease or injury which is the subject matter of the lawsuit against the defendant, the individual was substantially familiar with applicable standards of care and practice as they relate to the act or omission which is the subject of the lawsuit on the date of the incident.

(2) PHYSICIAN REVIEW.—In a health care lawsuit, if the claim of the plaintiff involved treatment that is recommended or provided by a physician (allopathic or osteopathic), an individual shall not be qualified to be an expert witness under this subsection with respect to issues of negligence concerning such treatment unless such individual is a physician.

(3) SPECIALTIES AND SUBSPECIALTIES.—With respect to a lawsuit described in paragraph (1), a court shall not permit an expert in one medical specialty or subspecialty to testify against a defendant in another medical specialty or subspecialty unless, in addition to a showing of substantial familiarity in accordance with paragraph (1)(B), there is a showing that the standards of care and practice in the two specialty or subspecialty fields are similar.

(4) LIMITATION.—The limitations in this subsection shall not apply to expert witnesses testifying as to the degree or permanency of medical or physical impairment.

SEC. 17. ADDITIONAL HEALTH BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The amount of any damages received by a claimant in any health care lawsuit shall be reduced by the court by the amount of any collateral source benefits to which the claimant is entitled, less any insurance premiums or other payments made by the claimant (or by the spouse, parent, child, or legal guardian of the claimant) to obtain or secure such benefits.

(b) PRESERVATION OF CURRENT LAW.—Where a payor of collateral source benefits has a right of recovery by reimbursement or subrogation and such right is permitted under Federal or State law, subsection (a) shall not apply.

(c) APPLICATION OF PROVISION.—This section shall apply to any health care lawsuit that is settled or resolved by a fact finder.

SEC. 18. PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

(a) PUNITIVE DAMAGES PERMITTED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Punitive damages may, if otherwise available under applicable State or Federal law, be awarded against any person in a health care lawsuit only if it is proven by clear and convincing evidence that such person acted with malicious intent to injure the claimant, or that such person deliberately failed to avoid unnecessary injury that such person knew the claimant was substantially certain to suffer.

(2) FILING OF LAWSUIT.—No demand for punitive damages shall be included in a health care lawsuit as initially filed. A court may allow a claimant to file an amended pleading for punitive damages only upon a motion by the claimant and after a finding by the court, upon review of supporting and opposing affidavits or after a hearing, after weighing the evidence, that the claimant has established by a substantial probability that the claimant will prevail on the claim for punitive damages.

(3) SEPARATE PROCEEDING.—At the request of any party in a health care lawsuit, the trier of fact shall consider in a separate proceeding—

(A) whether punitive damages are to be awarded and the amount of such award; and

(B) the amount of punitive damages following a determination of punitive liability. If a separate proceeding is requested, evidence relevant only to the claim for punitive damages, as determined by applicable State law, shall be inadmissible in any proceeding to determine whether compensatory damages are to be awarded.

(4) LIMITATION WHERE NO COMPENSATORY DAMAGES ARE AWARDED.—In any health care lawsuit where no judgment for compensatory damages is rendered against a person, no punitive damages may be awarded with respect to the claim in such lawsuit against such person.

(b) DETERMINING AMOUNT OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES.—

(1) FACTORS CONSIDERED.—In determining the amount of punitive damages under this section, the trier of fact shall consider only the following:

(A) the severity of the harm caused by the conduct of such party;

(B) the duration of the conduct or any concealment of it by such party;

(C) the profitability of the conduct to such party;

(D) the number of products sold or medical procedures rendered for compensation, as the case may be, by such party, of the kind causing the harm complained of by the claimant;

(E) any criminal penalties imposed on such party, as a result of the conduct complained of by the claimant; and

(F) the amount of any civil fines assessed against such party as a result of the conduct complained of by the claimant.

(2) MAXIMUM AWARD.—The amount of punitive damages awarded in a health care lawsuit may not exceed an amount equal to two times the amount of economic damages awarded in the lawsuit or $250,000, whichever is greater. The jury shall not be informed of the limitation under the preceding sentence.

(C) LIABILITY OF HEALTH CARE PROVIDERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—A health care provider who prescribes, or who dispenses pursuant to a prescription, a drug, biological product, or medical device approved by the Food and Drug Administration, for an approved indication of the drug, biological product, or medical device, shall not be named as a party to a product liability lawsuit invoking such drug, biological product, or medical device and shall not be liable to a claimant in a class action lawsuit against the manufacturer, distributor, or product seller of such drug, biological product, or medical device.

(2) MEDICAL PRODUCT.—The term “medical product” means a drug or device intended for humans. The terms “drug” and “device” have the meanings given such terms in sections 201(g)(1) and 201(h) of the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 321), respectively, including any component or raw material used therein, but excluding health care services.

SEC. 19. AUTHORIZATION OF PAYMENT OF FUTURE DAMAGES TO CLAIMANTS IN HEALTH CARE LAWSUITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In any health care lawsuit, if an award of future damages, without reduction to present value, equaling or exceeding $50,000 is made against a party with sufficient insurance or other assets to fund a periodic payment of such a judgment, the court shall, at the request of any party, enter a judgment ordering that the future damages be paid by periodic payments in accordance with the Uniform Periodic Payment of Judgments Act promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws.

(b) APPLICABILITY.—This section applies to all actions which have not been first set for trial or retrial before the effective date of this part.

SEC. 20. EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS.

(a) GENERAL VACCINE INJURY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To the extent that title XXI of the Public Health Service Act establishes a Federal rule of law applicable to a civil action brought for a vaccine-related injury or death—

(A) this part shall not affect the application of the rule of law to such an action; and

(B) any rule of law prescribed by this part in conflict with a rule of law of such title XXI shall not apply to such action.

(2) EXCEPTION.—If there is an aspect of a civil action brought for a vaccine-related injury or death to which a Federal rule of law under title XXI of the Public Health Service Act does not apply, then this part or otherwise applicable law (as determined under this part) will apply to such aspect of such action.

(b) SMALLPOX VACCINE INJURY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To the extent that part C of title II of the Public Health Service Act establishes a Federal rule of law applicable to a civil action brought for a smallpox vaccine-related injury or death—

(A) this part shall not affect the application of the rule of law to such an action; and

(B) any rule of law prescribed by this part in conflict with a rule of law of such part C shall not apply to such action.

(2) EXCEPTION.—If there is an aspect of a civil action brought for a smallpox vaccine-related injury or death to which a Federal rule of law under part C of title II of the Public Health Service Act does not apply, then this part or otherwise applicable law (as determined under this part) will apply to such aspect of such action.

(c) OTHER FEDERAL LAW.—Except as provided in this section, nothing in this part shall be deemed to affect any defense available, or any limitation on liability that applies to, a defendant in a health care lawsuit or action under any other provision of Federal law.

SEC. 21. STATE FLEXIBILITY AND PROTECTION OF STATES' RIGHTS.

(a) HEALTH CARE LAWSUITS.—The provisions governing health care lawsuits set forth in this part shall preempt, subject to subsections (b) and (c), State law to the extent that State law prevents the application of any provisions of law established by or under this part. The provisions governing health care lawsuits set forth in this part supersede chapter 171 of title 28, United States Code, to the extent that such chapter—

(1) provides for a greater amount of damages or contingent fees, a longer period in which a health care lawsuit may be commenced, or a reduced applicability or scope of periodic payment of future damages, than provided in this part; or

(2) prohibits the introduction of evidence regarding collateral source benefits.

(b) PREEMPTION OF CERTAIN STATE LAWS.—No provision of this part shall be construed to preempt any State law (whether effective before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this part) that specifies a particular monetary amount of compensatory or punitive damages (or the total amount of damages) that may be awarded in a health care lawsuit, regardless of whether such monetary amount is greater or lesser than is provided for under this part, notwithstanding section 15(a).

(c) PROTECTION OF STATE'S RIGHTS AND OTHER LAWS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Any issue that is not governed by a provision of law established by or under this part (including the State standards of negligence) shall be governed by otherwise applicable Federal or State law.

(2) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this part shall be construed to—

(A) preempt or supersede any Federal or State law that imposes greater procedural or substantive protections (such as a shorter statute of limitations) for a health care provider or health care institution from liability, loss, or damages than those provided by this part;

(B) preempt or supercede any State law that permits and provides for the enforcement of any arbitration agreement related to a health care liability claim whether enacted prior to or after the date of enactment of this part;

(C) create a cause of action that is not otherwise available under Federal or State law; or

(D) affect the scope of preemption of any other Federal law.

SEC. 22. APPLICABILITY; EFFECTIVE DATE.

This part shall apply to any health care lawsuit brought in a Federal or State court, or subject to an alternative dispute resolution system, that is initiated on or after the date of the enactment of this part, except that any health care lawsuit arising from an injury occurring prior to the date of enactment of this part shall be governed by the applicable statute of limitations provisions in effect at the time the injury occurred.

“SEC. 28. PRESERVING ACCESS TO AFFORDABLE GENERICS.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—

“(1) ENFORCEMENT PROCEEDING.—The Federal Trade Commission may initiate a proceeding to enforce the provisions of this section against the parties to any agreement resolving or settling, on a final or interim basis, a patent infringement claim, in connection with the sale of a drug product.

“(2) PRESUMPTION.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), in such a proceeding, an agreement shall be presumed to have anticompetitive effects and be unlawful if—

“(i) an ANDA filer receives anything of value; and “(ii) the ANDA filer agrees to limit or forego research, development, manufacturing, marketing, or sales of the ANDA product for any period of time.

“(B) EXCEPTION.—The presumption in subparagraph (A) shall not apply if the parties to such agreement demonstrate by clear and convincing evidence that the procompetitive benefits of the agreement outweigh the anticompetitive effects of the agreement.

“(b) COMPETITIVE FACTORS.—In determining whether the settling parties have met their burden under subsection (a)(2)(B), the fact finder shall consider—

“(1) the length of time remaining until the end of the life of the relevant patent, compared with the agreed upon entry date for the ANDA product;

“(2) the value to consumers of the competition from the ANDA product allowed under the agreement;

“(3) the form and amount of consideration received by the ANDA filer in the agreement resolving or settling the patent infringement claim;

“(4) the revenue the ANDA filer would have received by winning the patent litigation;

“(5) the reduction in the NDA holder's revenues if it had lost the patent litigation;

“(6) the time period between the date of the agreement conveying value to the ANDA filer and the date of the settlement of the patent infringement claim; and

“(7) any other factor that the fact finder, in its discretion, deems relevant to its determination of competitive effects under this subsection.

“(c) LIMITATIONS.—In determining whether the settling parties have met their burden under subsection (a)(2)(B), the fact finder shall not presume—

“(1) that entry would not have occurred until the expiration of the relevant patent or statutory exclusivity; or

“(2) that the agreement's provision for entry of the ANDA product prior to the expiration of the relevant patent or statutory exclusivity means that the agreement is procompetitive, although such evidence may be relevant to the fact finder's determination under this section.

“(d) EXCLUSIONS.—Nothing in this section shall prohibit a resolution or settlement of a patent infringement claim in which the consideration granted by the NDA holder to the ANDA filer as part of the resolution or settlement includes only one or more of the following:

“(1) The right to market the ANDA product in the United States prior to the expiration of—

“(A) any patent that is the basis for the patent infringement claim; or “(B) any patent right or other statutory exclusivity that would prevent the marketing of such drug.

“(2) A payment for reasonable litigation expenses not to exceed $7,500,000.

“(3) A covenant not to sue on any claim that the ANDA product infringes a United States patent.

“(e) REGULATIONS AND ENFORCEMENT.—

“(1) REGULATIONS.—The Federal Trade Commission may issue, in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code, regulations implementing and interpreting this section. These regulations may exempt certain types of agreements described in subsection (a) if the Commission determines such agreements will further market competition and benefit consumers. Judicial review of any such regulation shall be in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia pursuant to section 706 of title 5, United States Code.

“(2) ENFORCEMENT.—A violation of this section shall be treated as a violation of section 5.

“(3) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Any person, partnership or corporation that is subject to a final order of the Commission, issued in an administrative adjudicative proceeding under the authority of subsection (a)(1), may, within 30 days of the issuance of such order, petition for review of such order in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit or the United States Court of Appeals for the circuit in which the ultimate parent entity, as defined at 16 C.F.R. 801.1(a)(3), of the NDA holder is incorporated as of the date that the NDA is filed with the Secretary of the Food and Drug Administration, or the United States Court of Appeals for the circuit in which the ultimate parent entity of the ANDA filer is incorporated as of the date that the ANDA is filed with the Secretary of the Food and Drug Administration. In such a review proceeding, the findings of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive.

“(f) ANTITRUST LAWS.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to modify, impair or supersede the applicability of the antitrust laws as defined in subsection (a) of the 1st section of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 12(a)) and of section 05 of this title to the extent that section 5 applies to unfair methods of competition. Nothing in this section shall modify, impair, limit or supersede the right of an ANDA filer to assert claims or counterclaims against any person, under the antitrust laws or other laws relating to unfair competition.

“(g) PENALTIES.—

“(1) FORFEITURE.—Each person, partnership or corporation that violates or assists in the violation of this section shall forfeit and pay to the United States a civil penalty sufficient to deter violations of this section, but in no event greater than 3 times the value received by the party that is reasonably attributable to a violation of this section. If no such value has been received by the NDA holder, the penalty to the NDA holder shall be sufficient to deter violations, but in no event greater than 3 times the value given to the ANDA filer reasonably attributable to the violation of this section. Such penalty shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the Federal Trade Commission, in its own name by any of its attorneys designated by it for such purpose, in a district court of the United States against any person, partnership or corporation that violates this section. In such actions, the United States district courts are empowered to grant mandatory injunctions and such other and further equitable relief as they deem appropriate.

“(2) CEASE AND DESIST.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—If the Commission has issued a cease and desist order with respect to a person, partnership or corporation in an administrative adjudicative proceeding under the authority of subsection (a)(1), an action brought pursuant to paragraph (1) may be commenced against such person, partnership or corporation at any time before the expiration of one year after such order becomes final pursuant to section 5(g).

“(B) EXCEPTION.—In an action under subparagraph (A), the findings of the Commission as to the material facts in the administrative adjudicative proceeding with respect to such person’s, partnership’s or corporation’s violation of this section shall be conclusive unless—

“(i) the terms of such cease and desist order expressly provide that the Commission’s findings shall not be conclusive; or

“(ii) the order became final by reason of section 5(g)(1), in which case such finding shall be conclusive if supported by evidence.

“(3) CIVIL PENALTY.—In determining the amount of the civil penalty described in this section, the court shall take into account—

“(A) the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the violation;

“(B) with respect to the violator, the degree of culpability, any history of violations, the ability to pay, any effect on the ability to continue doing business, profits earned by the NDA holder, compensation received by the ANDA filer, and the amount of commerce affected; and “(C) other matters that justice requires.

RECOGNIZING THE 60TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE OUTBREAK OF THE KOREAN WAR

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of S.J. Res. 32, introduced earlier today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the joint resolution by title.

The assistant editor of the Daily Digest read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 32) recognizing the 60th anniversary of the outbreak of the Korean War and reaffirming the United States-Korea alliance.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. BURR. Mr. President, this joint resolution recognizes the 60th anniversary of the outbreak of the Korean war, as well as honoring the strong friendship between the United States and the Republic of Korea.

June 25 is a very important day, not only in Korean history, but also in U.S. history. On that day 60 years ago, Communist troops from the Soviet-occupied north crossed the invisible border at the 38th parallel to invade their free brethren to the south—killing thousands of civilians and forcing streams of refugees to flee their advance.

Under the leadership of President Harry S. Truman, the United States responded to its first military challenge of the Cold War by dispatching U.S. forces to lead 15 other countries of a United Nations force to defend against the spread of communism. President Truman made his commitment to the war very clear:

In the simplest terms, what we are doing in Korea is this: We are trying to prevent a third world war. . . . If history has taught us anything, it is that aggression anywhere in the world is a threat to peace everywhere in the world. When that aggression is supported by the cruel and selfish rulers of a powerful nation who are bent on conquest, it becomes a clear and present danger to the security and independence of every free nation.

During the 3 years of the Korean war, 5.7 million Americans answered the call to duty, and almost 1.8 million of these men and women deployed across the Pacific to serve in some of the most harsh and unforgiving conditions along the rugged peninsula, in the skies above the Yalu River, on carriers and other surface ships at sea, or from staging and support areas in Japan. By the official cease fire on July 27, 1953, 54,246 American servicemen and servicewomen had sacrificed their lives to defeat Korean and Chinese Communist troops and push them north of what is known as the Demilitarized Zone. Since then, a stalemate has existed on the Korean Peninsula, with the United States supporting a free and prosperous Republic of Korea, while keeping a wary eye on the brutally repressive regime across the border. In the last 60 years, there have been several confrontational episodes and potential flashpoints between the two Koreas, and events of the last few weeks show us that the conflict continues today.

Although we are hopeful that the swell of military action 60 years ago will be the most profound fighting in the Korean war, North Korea has shown a propensity to provoke its sister country in the South. This is clearly evident in the brutal murder of 46 South Korean sailors of the South Korean Navy ship, the Cheowan, on May 20. Compelling evidence points toward North Korean culpability in this latest episode. Such an act of aggression only serves to underscore and reaffirm the importance of the alliance between the United States and the Republic of Korea.

Today, U.S. Forces Korea—the combined American air, ground, and naval forces of roughly 28,500 American servicemembers—still stand ready to assist in the safety and security of South Korea near the Demilitarized Zone, DMZ, and throughout the rest of the peninsula below the 38th Parallel.

This mutual and enduring friendship has been in evidence since September 11, 2001. South Korea has been an able and willing ally in the global war on terror, dispatching the 100th Engineer Group and 924th Medical Group to both Iraq and Afghanistan. Their forces have been integral in providing humanitarian and medical aid to soldiers and civilians alike, as well as working to rebuild infrastructure in Afghanistan and Iraq.

I ask all of my esteemed colleagues to stand with me and pass this joint resolution, to not only commemorate the 60th anniversary of the beginning of the Korean war and properly honor those Americans who served proudly in that conflict, but also to recognize the continued resilience and vibrancy of the alliance between our nations.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be added as a co-sponsor to this measure.
